Reagan Reconfirms Peace Commitment

By Steven R. Weisman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan has pledged that his administration will work with the new leadership in the Soviet Union to improve U.S.-Soviet relations after the death of Leonid I. Brezhnev.

At a televised news conference at the White House on Thursday night, the president said, "Our two nations bear a tremendous responsibility for peace in a dangerous time, a responsibility we don't take confirm that we will continue to pursue every avenue for progress

But Mr. Reagan also reiterated his position in favor of building up U.S. armed forces. He repeated past criticisms of the concept of detente, saying that for 10 years the United States had eased up on its military buildup but the Soviet Union had not.

"It takes two to tango," the president said, adding that the Sovict Union had yet to signal "that they want to tango also."

Mr. Reagan also said that Vice President George Bush would lead the U.S. delegation to Mr. Brezhnev's fimeral on Monday. He said the U.S. goal was "a search for peace" and that "I believe we can continue that search without my attendance at the services."

The president's schedule next week includes visits by Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany.

A White House official said Friday that Secretary of State George P. Shultz and several for-mer State Department leaders would be in the delegation, United Press loternational reported. The others in the party will be the Sen-Baker Jr. of Tennessee; House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Democrat of Massachusetts; and six former secretaries of state - Alexander M. Haig Jr., Edmund S.

Before the news conference, administration officials said that Mr. Reagan, in deciding not to travel to Moscow, had rejected a recom-mendation by Mr. Shultz and Wil-iam P. Clark, his national security adviser, that he make the trip.
These officials said Mr.

Reagan's instinct had been to forgo a visit on the ground that Soviet and U.S. leaders had never made such a gesture in the past. They said also that the president was concerned that the gesture of trav-eling to Moscow would be seen as hypocritical and "grandstanding" in light of his own harsh comments in the past about Soviet behavior.

At his first news conference as esident in January 1981, Mr. Reagan said the Kremlin leaders "reserve unto themselves the right to commit any crime, to lie, to cheat, in order to attain" their ob-

Mr. Reagan used the news conference Thursday night to repeat mostly familiar themes about the Soviet Union, but he did make a new point.

Asked if there might be some conciliatory gesture he could make to the Russians to improve relations, Mr. Reagan said he had taken a "first step" when he lifted the restrictions on grain sales to the Soviet Union. "Have we gotten anything for it?" he asked skeptically.

Andropov's rise to the peak of Kremlin authority came when the armed forces and key members of the Central Committee backed his candidacy for the post of party general secretary, which was held by Mr. Brezhnev since 1964.

Army troops, along with securi-ty and militia forces, formed a ring around the center of Moscow this morning, completely sealing off the Kremlin, where the 320-mem-ber Central Committee was meet-

val. Konstantin U. Chernenko. The selection of Mr. Andropov as general secretary came after and factional struggle that fol-lowed Mr. Brezhnev's serious ill-ness last March, Rivalry between vacuum, rumors apparently spread by his opponents within the party questioned his Russian back-ground. One of his grandparents was of Jewish parentage, according to reliable sources.

Mr. Andropov and Mr. Chernenko, while it could not be observed withing the secrecy of the ruling Politburo, was all too obvious among their supporters.

But the halance of forces in the leadership was reportedly tipped decisively in Mr. Andropov's tavor because the principal lobhies, in-cluding the armed forces, were disturbed by Mr. Chernenko's lack of experience in foreign and security

Moreover, these elements have questioned Mr. Chernenko's general experience. He is widely re-garded as a "faceless hureaucrat" who owed his rise to prominence entirely to his association with Mr. Brezhnev. He has long been the head of Mr. Brezhnev's personal office and effectively remained in that role even after being elected to the Polithura five years year.

It was noticeable that Mr. Audropov had made no reference to détente or any foreign policy is-sues, although he is regarded as a specialist on foreign affairs. Toll Mounts FASE In Bombing CLASSE In Lebanon

By William E. Farrell New York Times Service
JERUSALEM — The death toll in the explosion at the Israeli Army's regional headquarters in the Lehanese port city of Tyre reached 62 Friday as rescue workers continued to pick through the rubble lonking for survivors. The seven-story building was de-molished Thursday by an explo-sion. The Israeli cabinet created an inquiry panel Friday to investigate the incident and ordered the group to make a report within a week. Rescue teams sifted the rubble Friday and two giant cranes lifted up pieces of the leveled huilding so aid teams could search for more survivors.

Three Israelis were taken alive from the rubble. Of the 62 dead, 47 were Israelis, mostly soldiers, and the remaining 15 were Arabs, most of them people who were being detained for questioning in the building's upper floors. Military officials said 50 to 60 people were still unaccounted for. The Israel Defense Forces spokesman said Friday night that 27 security personnel were missing. Presumably they are among the 50 to 60 missing. It is presumed that the casualty toll will increase. Rescue efforts are scheduled to continue through the night and all day Saturday, the Jewish sahbath.

A radio station in Lebanon reported that guerrillas of the Palestine Liberation Organization still hased in the Tripoli area and the Bekaa Valley, along with Syrian forces in the Bekaa Valley, had gone on alert because of a fear that the Israelis might conduct raids in reprisal for the blast.

When the blast occurred Thursday, there were reports that it was caused by a car bomb. But doubt was east on that version Friday because the building was wrecked while nearby structures were unharmed. A car bomb usually sprays its destructive power in all directions and seemed unlikely to cause the collapse of a seven-story

Walesa Internment Order Is Lifted But His Release Is Unconfirmed

WARSAW - Poland's martial law authorities lifted the order of internment Friday that has kept Lech Walesa, leader of the banned Solidarity trade union, confined for 11 months, an Interior Ministry spokesman said. It was uncertain whether he had left the isolated government resort of Arlamow, near Przemysi along Poland's southern border with the Soviet Union, where he was being held when the order was signed. Polish state television said Fri-

Official sources in Warsaw told United Press International that Mr. Walesa was expected in Gdansk, his home city in northern Poland, by Sunday. And Roman Catbolic Cburch sources in Gdansk said Mr. Walesa's family had been told to expect him home hefore Sunday.

In Washington, Larry M. Speakes, White House deputy press secretary, said of the release announcement: "We hope that it indicates that other detainees will be released. We hope that it signals an opportunity for renewed dia-logue between the government, Solidarity and the church, and that it will open opportunities to restore the fundamental freedoms to the Polish people." Official newspapers on Friday printed a letter signed by Mr. Walesa in Arlamow and dated Monday in which he proposed talks with Poland's martial-law ruler, General Woiciech Jaruzelski on "subjects of interest" and said with good will we shall surely find a solution."

Mr Urban said that the letter prompted a meeting between the union leader and Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak, after which the internment order had been lifted. General Jaruzelski had said as early as July that martial law could be lifted by the end of 1982.

A senior Polish delegate at the Madrid conference on European security and cooperation said Friday that martial law would probably be lifted before Christmas. Włodzimierz Konarski, deputy head of the Polish delegation, also told reporters in Madrid that Mr. Walesa would meet with General

Andropov's Move From KGB Post Put Him on Path to Top Party Job

By Richard M. Weintraub

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — For years the name Yuri Vladmirovich Andropov was associated only with the KGB, the all-powerful Soviet secret police, which he headed for 15 years. As a potential successor to the Kremlin helm, be was labeled at best a dark horse.

Then with stunning swiftness in May, Mr. Andropov moved from his post at the State Security Com-mittee, the KGB, and returned to the Communist Party Secretariat. He had been catapulted into the ranks of the front runners to follow Leonid I. Brezhnev, by then

On Friday, with equal suddenness, Mr. Andropov was elected the new Communist Party general secretary, succeeding Mr. Brezhnev in a position that may not necessarily be an enviable one if there is further infighting over the

Had Mr. Andropov remained at the KGB, it is highly unlikely he could have been a candidate for the leadership because few in the hierarchy likely would place so much power in the hands of one For all his identification with the intelligence and internal security agency, however, Mr. Andropov is first and foremost a career Communist Party official. He was sent to the KGB in 1967 to take over the sensitive top job at a time when the collective leadership sought tougher internal controls. His move back to the party Secretariat in May signaled that the serious maneuvering to succeed Mr. Brezhnev had begun. Appar-ently, Mr. Andropov and his allies wanted to move him to a position from which ascendancy to the top post would be more seemly.

Of Mr. Brezhnev's possible succorrespondent in Warsaw report-ed. There is a feeling that he is a relatively open-minded man who might be prepared to experiment with the economy while maintain-ing a tight rein on political dissent. Hungarian officials recall Mr.

Andropov's stay in Budapest as Soviet ambassador during the milisuppressed the 1936 uprising. Despite his task of laying the field work for the Soviet invasion, he is remembered as a diplomat who took the trouble to learn Hungarian and understand the country's distinctive culture.

By contrast, Konstantin U. Chernenko, Mr. Andropov's main rival for the leadership, is depicted by Hungarian sources as a mediocre bureaucrat whose chief distinction was the personal belp he was able to give to Mr. Brezhnev. Mr. Andropov, at 68, is some-

The Associated Press SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - The government has asked 17 of the 25 Soviet diplomats here to leave as soon as possible, officials said.

He is said to be and the next generation in their late 50s and 60s. He is said to be an urbane man who can speak English, a rarity among the Kremlin's political clite.

Since his emergence as a major contender for power, a debate among observers of Kremlin af-fairs has developed about his political outlook. Some point to his role in crushing the Hungarian revolt and later his work against internal dissent in the Soviet Union as a sign that he is hard-liner. Others say that he has more liberal tendencies than his actions would suggest and is something of a reformer within the Soviet context.

Like most others in the Soviet hierarchy, Mr. Andropov had bumble origins. His father was a railroad employee when be was born June 15, 1914, at Nagutskaya in the northern Caucasus. He attended Petrozavodsk University, did not graduate, but embarked on a party career

After filling local and regional party posts in the 1940s, he was brought to Moscow to attend the Higher Party School in the early 1950s and then, in July 1954, was assigned to the Soviet Embassy in Budapest.

Mr. Andropov became a full member of the Central Committee in 1961, a nonvoting candidate member of the Politburo in 1967 and a full member in 1973.

Widow of Bhutto To Leave Pakistan

United Press International ISLAMABAD, Pakistan - The government has granted permission for Nusrat Bhutto, the widow of Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, the prime minister who was executed by the military regime, to go ahroad for medical treatment of suspected lung cancer, officials said Friday.

The government has informed Mrs. Bhutto, 52, of its decision and directed the state bank of Pakistan to release the necessary foreign ex-change needed for her treatment, the officials said. The decision was made following a report from a medical board that included two doctors of Mrs. Bhutto's choice.

After she applied on Aug. 22 for permission to seek treatment ahroad, the government appointed the board to determine if she was ill. Mrs. Bhutto is chairman of her deceased husband's Pakistan People's Party.

But Mr. Chernenko stressed that it was "now twice, thrice more important to conduct matters in the party collectively." The remarks and the tone of his speech suggested that he and his supporters expect Mr. Andropov to stick to the collective leadership patterns de-veloped under Mr. Brezhnev.

Many Brezhnev loyalists in the party and government hierarchy bad hoped that Mr. Chernenko, as the closest aide of the dead leader, would quickly step into his patron's shoes. Mr. Chernenko has, in effect, deputized for the ailing Mr. Brezhnev for a greater part of this year and had the control of the party aparatus.

According to Soviet observers, Mr. Brezhnev's death was sudden and unexpected and had caught Mr. Chernenko's supporters off guard. This was said to have left the field wide open for Mr. Andro-

3 IRA Suspects Are Killed in Ulster

BELFAST (AP) — Three reputed Irish Republican Army members were shot to death Thursday night when they failed to stop at a security checkpoint near Lurgan, about 20 miles (32 kilometers) southwest of Belfast, police reported.

A press spokesman at the Belfast headquarters of the Royal Ulster Constabulary said two of the three were wanted for questioning in connection with an attempted murder and on weapons possession charges. "Their deaths will be a fairly serious blow to the IRA," said the spokes-

The spokesman said police manning the roadblock opened fire when the driver tried to run down an officer. The officer was injured. The two wanted men were identified as Eugene Toman and Sean Frederick Burns. The police spokesman said the two and a third man, James Jervise McKerr, were members of the outlawed IRA.

Chinese Congress to Meet Nov. 26

BEIJING (Reuters) — The National People's Congress will open its annual meeting Nov. 26, the official Chinese press agency said Friday.

The session is expected to pass a new constitution reviving the post of state chairman or president, although Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang has said the job will not be filled until late 1983. China has been without a head of state since 1968, when the post of state chairman was left vacant after Mao purged its last incumbent. Liu Shaoqi, who later died in pris-

Many members of the opposi-tion Labor Party contend that the new regulations do not go far enough toward ending discrimina-tion against immigrant women already settled in Britain. A Labor attack along these lines was defeated Thursday night in the 635-seat Commons by a 316-235 vote

Before March 1, 1980, both men and woman legally resident in Brit-ain were allowed to bring their spouses or fiances into the country. Men are still allowed to do so. But the Thatcher government introduced new rules on that date banning women who were not born in Britain, or who did not have one parent born in Britain, from bringing in their husbands or fiances. The legislation was ap-proved after allegations that marriages were being arranged to cir-

First 'Paying' Satellite Spun Out Into Space By Columbia Shuttle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida - The space shuttle Columbia, in its inaugural voyage as a space freighter, has successfully released the first of two satellites it was hauling for the program's first paying customers.

The satellite drifted away, fired its own rocket and then climbed toward the higher orbit where it will act as a relay station for communications by American husinesses.

Thus, after 10 years of development and four test flights, the space shottle succeeded in its first attempt to do what it is expected to dn many times over in the dec-ades ahead, deliver satellites to space.

[A second satellite, Canada's

The astronauts are to continue cruising through space for three more days, running more engineering tests of the spaceship and on Sunday morning conducting the first "space walk" from the shuttle.

Reagan Hints at Compromise

By David Hoffman and Lou Cannon

هكذا من الرَّحيل

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan is giving serious consideration to a nickel-a-gallon gasoline tax increase next year to finance the rebuilding of the nation's deteriorating roads and bridges, and be also says he has opened the door to consideration of possible cuts in the defense bud-

On Thursday might, in his first nationally televised news confer-ence since the Nov. 2 midtern elections, the president indicated that he is flexible on the sensitive issues of taxes and military spending. The administration's stance in both areas faces growing pressure in Congress.

Mr. Reagan said he had not reached any final decisions on the road- and bridge-repair program, but he cast the proposal in a positive tone.

A White House ufficial said after the news conference that the president is leaning in favor of it. As presented to Mr. Reagan ear-Serretary Drew Lewis, the 5-centa-agallon gas tax increase would generate $5.5 billion a year to be dedicated to roads, bridges and mass transit. Although it is viewed primarily as a transportation initi-ative, administration officials estiafree, administration officials estimate it would also produce 320,000 jobs at a time when Congress is demanding action to alleviate the highest unemployment rate since 1940.

While the president said at his. Sept. 28 news conference that it would take a "palace coup" to win his approval for new taxes next year, he made it clear Thursday year, he made it clear intrisory night that his objections did not include the gasoline tax increase. He called it a "user fee" instead of a tax and said it would not "in any way" interfere with the tax cuts he won from Congress last year. Mr. Reagan had deferred action on the rebuilding program earlier this year. But be said it is now under consultation and deep thought by all of us" and described the problem of crumbling roads and bridges as one that "must be met sooner or later"

While the road- and bridge-fixing program enjoys growing sup-port in Congress, Mr. Reagan stopped short of endorsing an ex-plicit public-works employment ef-fort of the kind Democrats are readying for the lame-duck session of Congress that begins Nov. 29.

"It is true that there are other voices that are being raised in the Congress who are suggesting that the answer is to go back to things that have been tried in previous recessions, namely make-work joh programs with the government taking billions of dollars out of the private sector to spend on these projects," Mr. Reagan said. He claimed that $66 billion invested in public-works employment over seven years, ending in 1981, "got us nothing but an in-crease in unemployment. It did not resolve the problem."

Taking note of the Democratic proposals being floated on Capitol Hill, Mr. Reagan said he would not accept any jobs program from Congress that "would be a drag on the economy and would slaw down our effort to really restore legitimate employment.

"We're not going to go down the dead-end street that just leaves us set up for another recession," the president said. He pointed out that 3 million of the nation's 11.6 million unemployed are new entrants into the job market who have been unable to find work "because of

"And this has got to be one of our greatest problems — is creat-ing the jobs to keep up with that kind of expansion," Mr. Reagan said. He failed to mention, however, that his 1980 campaign was huilt on a promise - still unfulfilled -- to end that economic stagnation and create jobs.

On military spending, the president was asked whether he agreed with those Republicans, as well as Democrats, who have called for some restraint in the proposed $1.6-trillinn, five-year defense buildup that he has outlined.

The president said the Pentagon hudget could not be trimmed "for just one year" because of the long lead time of weapons systems.

U.S. Benefits Panel Sees Big Deficit

By Spencer Rich

Vashington Post Service WASHINGTON — The bipartisan National Commission on Social Security Reform has unanimously agreed that the system of retirement benefits and disability payments needs $150 billion to $200 billion in tax increases nr benefit cuts in the next seven years to stave off bankruptcy.

He also said it seemed likely that there would be attempts to move tax increases now scheduled fur 1985, 1986 and 1990 ahead in

In addition to their vote on the size of the near-term deficit, the commission members also agreed on the dimensions of the Social Se-curity system's likely long-term deficit, saying it would prohably come to 1.8 percent of wages subject to the Social Security tax.

That means that, not counting benefit cuts, it would take a tax increase of 1.8 percentage points

Humanlike Fossils Found in Kenya

By Mary Anne Fitzgerald Washington Post Service

NAIROBI - Kenyan and Japanese scientists have announced the discovery of teeth and jaw bone fragments that are 15 million years old and could be the remains of a very distant ancestor of man.

The announcement was made simultaneously here Thursday by Richard E. Leakey, director of the Nadonal Museum of Kenya, and in Japan hy Hidewi Isbida, leader of the Japanese team and professor of primatology at Osaka Universi-

Mr. Leakey said the site in northern Kenya, which he described as unusually prolific, had yielded the bones of a hominoid species known as Kenyapithecus. A hominoid is a being resembling walk on two legs.

"But I can tell you we have got a site where I think we are going to get the evidence to answer this question," Mr. Leakey continued. "It may be possible to make a definite statement of what was happening in Africa 14 or 15 million years ago in terms of this are ancestor story.

He added, "It's a tremendously important turning point in our science. There's a potential for getting the component part that will tell us what it is," he added. Studies of geological strata in that area have determined that the fussils are about 15 million years nld. This is now thought to be long before the appearance of twolegged creatures generally considered buman.

The initial discovery was made by Martin Pickford of the Kenyan team on Oct. 15, the final morning of a three-month field trip. This fossil site was only about two miles (three kilometers) from the expedition's camp. Expedition members had passed it daily on their way to another site a two-and-a-half-hour walk away that has yielded a humanlike upper jaw estimated to be eight million years old.

Accidental War With A-Bombs Called Unlikely

The Associated Press
UNITED NATIONS, New York — A book on "risks of unintentional nuclear war," sponsored by the UN Institute for Disarmament Research, concludes that such risks are virtually nonexistent

The book, by Daniel Frei and Christian Catrina of Zurich University, says: "The likelihood of an unintentional outhreak of nuclear war is extremely small, almost close to zero." Still, they said, "it deserves the utmost attention and careful consideration." "Given the terrible nature and atrocious dimensions of the possible tragedy," they said, "even the slightest chance that it might occur makes it a matter of grave concern." The disarmament research institute, established in 1980, is an arm of the UN Institute for Training and Research. Davidson Nicol of Sierra Leone, executive director of the latter organization, announced plans for the book's publication at a special General Assembly session on disar-mament in June.

In one day, the scientists discovered 22 teeth and jaw fragments scattered over two acres (8,000 square meters). They also found fossilized bones of crocodiles, turtles, elephants, rhinoceroses and early relatives of antelopes. Exist-ing sediments and the presence of water-related reptiles indicate that the site was once on the edge of a lake. The area, which is about 300 miles north of Nairobi on the western edge of the Great Rift Valley, is now flat and treeless.

Mr. Leakey said that because of the high quantity of the bones, fur-Kenyapithecus limh bones or even a skeleton.

Until last year, Kenyapithecus was discredited as a species. The first example of one emerged in 1961, when the late Louis Leakey, Richard E. Leakey's father, uncarthed four teeth estimated at 14 million years old on the shores of Lake Victoria. He said that the teeth had characteristics that were more akin to humans' than toapes' ancestors.

In 1965, scientists suggested that Kenyapithecus was an African example of the Asian Ramapithecus, which was at that time believed to be a possible ancestor of man. Then, last year, the remains of a Ramapitheous skull discovered in Pakistan showed that the species is an ancestor to the orangutan. Orangutans are not found in Afri-

The Kenyan site could determine the place of the Kenyapithecus in terms of buman ancestry.

Mr. Leakey said there was too big a time gap to link the new discovery to his most famous find, a skull put at nearly 2 million years old. The skull has a brain case large enough to show that a humanlike creature with a relatively high level of intelligence bved nearly 2 million years ago.

Population In U.S. Jails Grows Faster

By Mary Thornton Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON -The number of federal and state prisoners is growing at the highest rate since the government began keeping statistics in 1926, according to a new study by the Justice Depart:

The study, which covered the ther digging might yield some first six months of 1982, projected an annual increase of more than 14 percent in the number of prisoners, at a time when prison systems are severely overcrowded.

The states most seriously affected, the study said, are Texas, California, New York and Florida. The four account for one-third of all state prisoners in the country; each has a prison population of more than 25,000.

The study attributed the rise in prison population to increased admissions and declining releases.

Widespread adoption of new sentencing and parole laws has lengthened prison stays," it said.
"Mandatory sentencing laws have been passed in most states... and parole has been abolished in four states." In addition, some states have passed tougher laws against drunken driving.

The study found that males between the ages of 20 and 29 continus to be the most likely to end up in prison. During the 1970s, the number of prisoners in that group grew by more than 35 percent. Although women make up only 4 percent of the prison population, their number is also rising sharply. In the first half of 1982, the number of female prisoners increased by 11 percent. As of June 30, there were 17,142 women in state and federal prisons.

San Francisco Is Sued For Being Too Wealthy

By Philip Hager Los Angeles Times Service

SAN FRANCISCO - While most big cities are scraping near-empty harrels for revenue. San Francisco is finding itself with an emharrassment of riches, a steadily increasing budget surplus that currently exceeds $161 million, the largest in California.

A sharp debate has begun over whether the city ought to save the surplus to meet future fiscal needs or start sending it back to the taxpayers. The dispute crystallized in taxpayers' lawsuit filed Wednesday in San Francisco Superior Court seeking a refund of $58 million left over from fiscal 1980-

The lawsuit invokes a measure adopted by California voters in 1979 that provides that excess tax revenues "shall be returned by a revision of tax rates or fee schedules" within two years.

The legal battle has placed two formidable political figures on op-posite sides. The president of the Board of Supervisors, Quentin Kopp, is one of the plaintiffs demanding that the money be re-turned Mayor Dianne Feinstein is one of the city officials saving the money should be saved.

San Francisco is overtaxed San Francisco is awash with moncy," exclaimed Mr. Kopp, a frequent foe of the mayor. "You can bet the mayor will try to spend as much as possible. She's a spend-

"Supervisor Kopp is carrying his obstructionism to the point of bringing suit against his own city," the mayor said. "He persists in being a one-man destruction der-

As recently as 1979, when Mrs. Feinstein was waging a successful campaign against Mr. Kopp for mayor, San Francisco faced a projected deficit of more than $100 million on a city budget of $1 billion. Since then, the city's fiscal fortunes bave steadily improved, in part because of changes in accounting methods, a growing property tax base and increased charges on city services. In 1979, Proposition 4, an initiative also known as the Gann amendment, was passed a year after the voters enacted Proposition 13, the Jarvis-Gann property tax relief initiative. Proposition 4 placed limits on state and local budget increases and, among other things, required that tax money be returned when revenues exceeded

The city maintains it need not return the $58 million at issue, citing a provision in the amendment that allows local governments to establish "contingency" or "emergency" funds.

Mrs. Feinstein, in a recent "State of the City" address, said that as much as two-thirds of the current reserve would be needed to balance next year's budget.

Mr. Kopp accused the city of misapplying the amendment's pro-visions for contingency reserves.

'Preventive War' Worries Many in Honduras

By Alan Riding

New York Times Service
TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras A year after this country elected its first civilian government in a decade, the euphoria and optimism that accompanied President Ro-berto Suzzo Córdova's inauguration appear to have been eroded by increasing doubts about the fruits of democracy.

Not only have hopes for social change and an early recovery of the depressed economy been disappointed, but the country's peace has been disturbed by increasing terrorism and repression.

To many Hondurans, the army seems more visible and powerful today under the civilian administration of President Suazo Córdova than it was under the succession of the nine military regimes that ruled the country through the 1970s.

A pastoral letter from the country's seven Roman Catholic bishops noted last month: "One can easily perceive a clear disenchantment in many sectors of the population that went to the polls with so much hope. There is a general feeling of greater fear and of less freedom, particularly in border areas, some rural districts and, at times, in the large cities." "People voted so that the military would leave, but now they find that Alvarez is running the show," a liberal politician said, referring to General Gustavo Al-varez Martinez, the head of the Honduran armed forces. The United States, which has long played a prominent role in Honduras's domestic affairs, has inevitably been blamed for many of the country's troubles, above all since local politicians believed Washington would "reward" Honduras for returning to democracy with vast economic aid. But while the United States provided $89 million in aid in the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, including $35 million in emergency funds under President Ronald Reagan's Caribbean basin initiative, the Honduran economy is expected to register negative growth this year. And social unrest is increasing as unemployment and hardship Some politicians, both inside and outside the government, also argue that Washington's decision

Many Hondurans hold General Alvarez directly responsible for the new mood of uncertainty. But they also argue that he has been strengthened by the support he en-joys from the United States amassador, John D. Negropoute. Yet friends of General Alvarez say that he is unsure Washington would keep its pledge to help Honduras in case of conflict with Nicaragua. He reportedly was further alarmed by recent press criticism in the United States of Mr. Negroponte's performance in Honduras.

The Two Brezhnevs

For 18 years, Leonid I. Brezhnev was apparent master of a hostile superpower strong enough to sow a ouclear whirlwind. None was sown, or even threatened. In that time a perilous balance was sustained, and be earned a measure of respect as a hard yet realistic adversary. He was the oligarch we knew, and with his death at 75, Soviet power passes to beirs we barely know.

The first, worrying legacy is doubt. On the evidence, there will be no surprises.

The color of Leonid Brezhnev's Communism was not red but gray. In style, Mr. Bre-zhnev was no Nikita Khrushchev. He spoke for a consensual orthodoxy, stuck to the middle of the Kremlin road and took care to promote like-minded lieutenants. His protracted illness encouraged a system of collective judgment likely to persist until another first among equals eventually emerges.

But, crucially, the Brezhnev consensus rose to the challenge of arms control. Continuing on the path opened by John F. Kennedy and by Mr. Khrushchev, the Soviet Union put its signature to SALT-1 and has bound itself voluntarily to arms limits imposed by the unratified SALT-2. And Soviet compliance with a series of East-West accords has been at least as faithful as that of its partners.

These are large matters. They explain the grudging Western regard for this stolid Bol-shevik. Still, for all his stiff cordiality, Mr. Brezhnev was uowilling or unable to open the windows of a closed, suffocating society. Uoder his leadership, the Soviet Union chose guns over butter; with all its missiles, it proved too poor to feed itself and so weak it could not tolerate a whiff of dissidence, even from the great scientist Andrei Sakharov.

The Brezhnev era was repressive at best and brutal at its worst. Acting on his own proclaimed doctrine, be loosed the armies in 1968 that turned the Prague spring to endless winter. Just as ruthless was his regime's invasion of Afghanistan, and its use of Polish proxies to suppress a workers' uprising againsı a supposedly proletarian state.

"Which was the real Brezhnev?" Henry A. Kissinger once asked. "The leader woo spoke so threateningly of China or the old man who recited his devotion to peace? Probably both were genuine. Was the peace of which he spoke only the stillness of Soviet hegemony, or an acceptance of the imperatives of coexistence? The answer is almost surely both."

epitaph. Hère was a leader who hungered for the world's esteem but dared not permit his own subjects the freedom to earn it.

-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Freeing a 'Dangerous Man'

will soon be released testifies more to the effectiveness of martial law than to an easing of repressive control in Poland.

Why did the Warsaw junta choose Thursday to make the announcement? Perhaps it wanted to take advantage of Moscow's distraction over Leonid L Brezhnev's death. Perhaps it was delivering ou its part of a bargain with the Vatican in negotiations over the pope's newly rescheduled visit to his home-land. Perhaps it was, as Warsaw suggests, a response to a bid from Mr. Walesa to discuss a possible accord.

Whatever the immediate motive, Lech Walesa's release is long overdue on humani-tarian grounds. He has been beld for eleven months, the last seven in virtual solitary confinement, his sin being that he successfully organized workers' power in a society that claims to be a workers' state. Mr. Walesa's tactics were peaceful, even lawful.

Ultimately it is the effectiveness of repression that best explains General Jaruzelski's willingness to free the most dangerous man in Poland. As long as Solidarity could unleash a new wave of strikes, Mr. Walesa was not going to be set free. The effective protests of Aug. 31 elicited new controls and the formal banning of the union.

But on Wednesday, "normalization" effec-tively squelched the Solidarity underground's latest attempt at organizing a national work stoppage, to mark the second anniversary of its official recognition as a legal labor organi-zation. Solidarity's failure permitted a gesture of compassion.

General Jaruzelski's regime can claim success. Consumer goods remain in tight supply, factory and farm production have fallen dis-astrously and the mood remains sullen. The junta keeps a semblance of order by

Other Opinion

Brezhnev and After

Leonid Brezhnev was a vain man. He accepted more medals and awards than any other Soviet leader, including vaingloriously, the Afehan Star of Freedom.

Khrushchev is remembered with affection by many Russians for liberating thousands of surviving victims of the Stalin gulag. Brezhnev presided over the exile of Solzhenitsyn, the banishing of Sakharov and the imprisonment of dissidents in psychiatric hospitals. Brezhiev has done little to win the love of Leonid Brezhnev could play either dove or hawk in his relations with the West, but he never faltered in his effort to expand Soviet influence. His successors will pursue the same aims, and Western politicians must show the principles of individual liberty and national sovereignty so often ignored by Soviet leaders, past and present. - The Times (London).

Leonid Brezhnev's passing came at a time when the Soviet Union is beset with troubles at home and abroad.

On the bome front, the Soviet Union must cootend with a recession, low agricultural output and rigidity and corruption within the bureaucracy. Abroad, its military incursion into Afghanistan is deadlocked while tensioo in Poland has not abated.

What line of policy then, will Mr. Bre-zhnev's successor adopt? Will be have the wisdom and courage to reduce military spending and Soviet commitments abroad in the interest of the domestic economy? Or will he become more stubborn than Mr. Brezhnev and rely on military might to a greater extent? This is of vital concern to the West, which has no reason to be optimistic. The West should make it clear that it will not tolerate Soviet military intervention in any part of the world by the new regime. - The Daily Yomiuri (Tokyo). It is hard to believe that any successor will usher in radical departures from the policies, domestic or foreign, bequeathed by Mr. Bre-zhnev. Since the fall of Nikita Khrushchev in 1964, the Soviet system has increasingly been dominated by a collective leadership of old men, and old men do not tend to go in for radical innovation.

- The Financial Times (London). Mr. Brezhnev's death has removed from the Soviet Union and the world a towering fig-ure. It also marks the end of an era. He was the builder of the Soviet Union as a military superpower.

— The Times of India (New Delhi).

Thanks to the doctrine that bears his name, the impulses for freedom in Czechoslovakia were throttled. He gave the command for the bloody battle of suppression in Afghanistan. He is responsible for the crushing of the Solidarity labor union:

- Die Well (Hamburg). During his era, with the exception of enormous real marient, there was no tenewal as such and he evaded reforms and suppressed even the first signs of them. In retrospect, the Brezhnev era can be qualified as conservative or even reactionary. At its end the Soviet Union stands as a powerful but seemingly immobile colossus.

- The Neue Zurcher Zeitung (Zwich) The death of Leonid Brezhnev was the only major political innovation be ever introduced into Soviet political history. In life, he stood for the status quo — as firmly as a man can stand when he is in fact walking slowly backward on a conveyor belt that is moving slow-ly forward beneath his feet.

But his death was something quite new. It did not resemble the deaths of Lenin or Stalin or the deposing of Khrushchev. The Soviet Union, and the watching world, will now encounter a novel experience. - The Economist (London).

Brezhnev represented and personified the apparatus of an archaic state faced with a society in ever more pressing oeed of renewal. The Soviet Unioo is an archaic state with a futuristic army. One cannot imagine a worse combination — military force without moral leadership. The fact that this military power has tried to conserve the moderate and con-ciliatory image of Brezhnev while gaining time in the arms race is not a contradiction. The death of Brezhnev will not necessarily produce a significant change in the short term, neither in foreign nor in domestie policy. While some see this as a sign of continuity and stability, it is, above all, a response to the obsolescence and lack of dynamism of the country's political structures - El Pais (Madrid).

He was a man of vision who passionately believed in peace and detente. Few will disa-gree with the proposition that be made a decisive contribution to the development of international cooperation.

1907: More Women at Work

LONDON - The Morning Post, dealing with the question of an official inquiry into female employment in the United States. says: "Not only is the oumber of women reported as breadwinners nr as engaged in gainful occupations enormous in itself, being not far short of five million at the last census but it represents an increasing proportion of all the women in the country. In 1881 one woman out of every six, taking 16 years as the lowest limit of age, was a breadwinner. In 1901, the proportion was one in five." Mean-while, in New York, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, wife of the president, was received with great acclaim when she became a member of the New York State Assembly of Mothers.

GENEVA — In the tense atmosphere of a quasi-state of siege, the funerals of the 11 victims of the rioting on Nov. 9 were held here. With Colonel Lederrey, who gave the orders to fire that evening, in command, troops were patrolling the city. Machine guns have been set up on the post office and no other commanding buildings. More than 4,000 workers stood bareheaded in the cold as Henri Furst, militant Communist and the first man killed was carried in his grave. Toward the end of the Furst services, a group of soldiers near the Palais des Expositions burled stones through the windows of the edifice and fraternized with the crowds on the boulevard, singing the "Internationale."

Washington, Its Stick Worn Out, Now Can Try the Carrot

WASHINGTON — Napoleon was once asked what the world would say when he died. The reaction, he answered, will be "Ouf.

So it is in Washington with the demise of Leonid I. Brezhnev. The changing of the guard in Moscow puts American policy toward the Soviet Union up for reconsideration. That prospect comes as a distinct relief.

For the experience of the past two years teaches the extraordinary difficulty of main-taining an undeviating hard line. A policy of pressure works only if there are carrots as well as sticks. So the current period of transition in the Kremlin presents a time, if there ever was a time, for trying a policy that includes elements

Monolithic hostility has up to now marked the attitude of the Reagan administration toward the Soviet Union. The president himself talked of a plan "which will leave Marxism-Leninism on the ash heap of history." He insti-tuted a huge military buildup with a confident sense that the United States could spend the sense that the United States could spend the Russians into the ground. Economic sanctions were directed against the Soviet Union. The West Europeans and Japanese were also pressured to apply sanctions, the better to moderate Communist behavior in Poland.

Each one of these pressures has found its limits. Ronald Reagan's ideological offensive has seemed primitive to many people in the Communist world and outside. It goes hand in hand with a policy of support for Taiwan that has alienated China, and pushed the regime there to begin negotiations for normalization of ties with the Soviet Union.

Military pressures have not forced the Russians to their knees. On the contrary, Leonid Brezhnev's last major speech — to the military commanders on Oct. 27 — seemed to signal an intensification of Soviet military efforts. At the same time, the Russians used the tough American talk as a background for gestures to woo European support for various Soviet arms control proposals.

Economic pressures rebounded in the same way. The American interest in selling grain to the Soviet Union worked against an embargo on food shipments that are truly crucial to the Communist world. The prejudice of the Reagan administration against government interference in free markets militated against calling the debts of East European countries.

With the United States refusing to make sacrifices, the Europeans and Japanese balked at joining the United States in limiting credits to the Soviet Union. Just before Mr. Brezhnev died, the Reagan administration threw in the towel on efforts to block a projected deal between the European allies and Moscow for con-struction of a Siberian natural-gas pipeline. Poland, by a circumstance hard 10 explain but common in history, provides the best measure of what has happened. Instead of teeling under U.S. pressure, the military regime of General Wojciech Jaruzelski benefited from a rollower of debt. It was able to keep tightening the screws on the Solidarity trade union. The day Mr. Brezhnev died also witnessed the fail-ure of a general strike called by Solidarity to protest the outlawing of the union. The fizzling of the strike so reduced the power of Solidarity that General Januzelski now feels free to release

If only because the policy of undifferentiated pressure yielded such poor results, the United States has a plain interest in seeing what a more conciliatory stance can achieve. So it is in order for the United States to make an opening to the soviet Union, a show of willingness to negotiate differences, particularly in the matter of arms control. Such a move might just achieve the positive outcome of weaning the Soviet leaders away from o tougher stance. At least it would away a background against which would provide a background against which American pressures, by contrasting with a measure of hope, would take on serious meaning.

The latest and loudest alliance "crisis" began with a bang when President Ronald Reagan decided last June that the Europeans were not serious about cracking down on the So-viet Union. He would strike a blow for Polish freedom by striking a blow against participation in the pipeline project by European-based subsidiar-ies and licensees of U.S. companies. The Europeans cracked back with fierce talk about their sacred sovereignty and the sanctity of signed contracts; they would meet the United States in court,

But the low wages of the poor explain why life expectancy and infant mortality in Brazil are the same as in much poorer countries. In the urban areas of the Northeast, life expectancy is about the same as in Ethiopia, a country with a per-capita gross national product that is one eighth of Brazil's. Now that economic growth has slowed. Brazil's major weapon for alleviating poverty — the creation of new jobs — has been blunted. According to an article in the jouroal Finance and Development by Peter Knight and Ricardo Moran, two World Bank specialists, the Brazilian economy would have to grow by at least five percent a year and perhaps by as much as seven percent a year to avoid an aggravation of social tension. This is going to be difficult in the unfavorable in ternational environment. What is needed, the authors argue, is a development strategy that increases the amount of employment generated by new investment, keeps imports down, and raises the productivity and well-being of the poor by improving their health and education.

The way out, they say, is to change the bias of the economy away from capital-intensiveness.

direct its services toward the poorer classes. This, they say, can be done without reducing the living standards of those who are better off. The first reform would be to re-

toward greater use of labor, and to move taxes on labor. The second would be to restructure indirect taxes so they fall no luxury goods and not on necessities. This would also help reduce imports and energy use.

Third, there should be a capital gains tax and an increase in the inberitance tax. These should increase the tax revenue of the Treasury by four percent of GNP, providing twice the amount needed for a program to meet the basic needs of the poor by the year 2000.

Such a program would involve increased investment in elementary health services, water supply, sewer-age and education. This would be tied into major land reforms that would supply credits for small farmers, thereby increasing both employment and food production. This would not only sharply raise labor productivity, it would also work to lower the birth rate, since fertility is known to fall as the educational status of mothers is raised.

Brazil is a rich nation that tolerates income disparities that some much poorer countries do not have. But in the end, the poverty and the income disparities, unless addressed vigorously, can only undermine the privileged life the country's middle class now epiovs.

Even blase professionals could not conceal their surprise last Sun-day at the crowd that filled several rooms and spilled over onto the first-floor landing. Had they intended to demonstrate that the auction game has changed from a highly specialized activity to a popular pastime, Paris auctioneers could not have produced more convincing evidence. It was obvious that many in the public were ous that many in the public were unfamiliar with the place as well as the rules of the game. Their willingness to join in, lack of experience notwithstanding, was astonishing But this made itself felt differently according to the fields. ferently according to the fields lo rarified areas such as Middle Eastern archaeology, notorious for its pitfalls, the effect was barely perceptible. Some of the cheaper items in the auction conducted by Claude Boisgirard sold perhaps a title more easily; the rarer pieces, which would be sought by collectors, did not and were if anything cheaper than they would normally

The biggest prize was much cheaper than it might have been in a weekday specialist sale. True, there may also have been a special reason. The square pottery plaque with protruding knob at the center was described and illustrated as a foundation plague of the 13th cenfoundation plaque of the 13th cen-tury B.C. from Chogha Zanbil ziggurar, in southwestern Iran. The presence of such an item in any auction is strange. Chogha Zanbil is a site of scientific excavation work conducted by the French Archaeological Delegation in Iran for the last two decades. No piece from an archaeological site can be treated as a commercial item since it is, by definition, state property. If genuine, the royal inscription stamped in cuneiform characters under the glaze mentioned by the expert makes it even less likely to have been exported under acceptable circumstances. Such a consideration would weigh heavily with the most likely buyers, i.e. muse-ums. While they will normally fight among themselves to get a document of such archaeological importance, they might be reluc-tant to face the possibility of fu-attendence of oewcomers.

day attendance. Two rooms made into one long hall had been re-served by the auctioneer Francis Briest. This was barely enough to accompdate the crowd

Briest had cleverly worked out the balance of his auction. It included a few minor items with famous signatures such as late etchings by Picasso, a small drawing by Modigliani or a minute landscape in oils by Albert Marquet. There were also some good pieces by little known artists, for example, Adolphe-Marie Beaufrère's Fauvist landscape of the beach at Le Pouldu. Finally, a large assortment of medium to low-range pieces by contemporary and mod-ern masters carried estimates mostly under 15,000 francs. The result largely exceeded exbeen affected more than others by the current recession. Out of total sales nearing 1.7 million francs ($233,000), only 13.4 percent failed to sell — half of that on account of one small painting by Georges Rouault in gouache and oils on tracing paper, which makes it very hard to sell under any circum-

Most striking perhaps was the ease with which some works that would be dismissed as unsalable by most professionals found buyers. Very few dealers are acquainted with the name of Pierre-Louis Flouquet, who spent most of his life in Belgium, where he died in 1967. He was a writer as much as a painter - which professionals don't like much. He gave up painting in the 30s. As his comp in india ink wash dated 1919 shows, he absorbed the influence of French Cubism and Italian Futurism, and anticipated Op Art by nearly half a century. At 5,800 francs, his tiny drawing was almost as expensive as might be that of an established master. This would

Another instance of their influence over prices was an Abstractionist watercolor done by Hans Hartung in 1970, which gracefully rose to 20,000 francs. Abstractionism in general is not doing too well these days, nor is Hartung in particular. However, the paintings that would probably sell with the greatest difficulty at an auction attended largely by professionals and old-timers were large oils by little known artists such as the Paris-school painter Constantin Byzantios, who does shadowy figures on an abstract ground in rather dark colors. On Sunday, one of his oils was knocked down at 12,570 francs and another at 10,370 francs, thanks to two young well-to-do Parisians trying to outbid each other. Even unwanted paintings man-aged to find a home that day. A neo-realist painting titled "Homage to Allen Jones," by Mimmo Rotella, soared to 18,200 francs — after having failed to sell several times within the last two years, another auctioneer assured me. The buyer a well dressed young woman, admitted she had never heard Rotella's name before.

All this helped to create a cli-mate in which professionals who had come to boost bidding on their favorite artists or, simply in order to buy, did so with greater enthusiasm than they might have displayed in different circumstances. An abstract composition by Matta (Roberto-Echaurren) dated 1954, was bought for 83,000 francs by one of the leading Paris galleries, and another one for 75,300 francs.

Here and there, a few interesting acquisitions could be made. A de-lightful 1917 Cubist still life, unusual for its delicate palette, was signed Marevna, whose real name is Maria Vorobieff and whose work is oot often seen at auction. This went for 44,570 francs while Beaufrère's view of Le Pouldu could be bad for 45,570 francs. According to professionals, the day's bargain, commercially speaking, was a Surrealist landscape done in 1953 by Felix Labisse at 30,270 francs, far below what might be charged in a gallery,

The overall impression among Drouot professionals is that an entirely new public is now being reached, which could make a tremendous difference to the market. And Sunday sales are the way to

Part of Stravinsky's draft score for "The Rite of Spring."

Stravinsky Score Sold For Record $548,000

By Souren Melikian International Herald Tribune

International Herald Tribune

I ONDON — A world record price for any autograph manuscript of a musical score was paid Thursday at Sotheby's for a draft of Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," The figure, £330,000 ($548,000), matches Sotheby's higher estimate and compares with the previous record of $350,000 established last May in New York for the original score of Debussy's "Pelléas et Mèlisande."

The world premiere of "The Rite of Spring" on May 29, 1913, by Diaghilev's Ballets Russes at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées in Paris — with choreography by Vaslav Nijinsky and conducted by Pierre Monteux — resulted in one of the celebrated uproars of music and dance history.

Asked about the reasons that might account for the record price, the Russian-born British conductor Guennady Zalkowitsch, who was assistant to Stravinsky during the composer's stay in Brazil in 1967, said that

"it reveals a purification process in the instrumentation."

Stravinsky who composed at the piano, would play around until he got an idea right, Zalkowitsch said. The composer never stopped completing and correcting his creation by annotating scores — he was still doing it in the '60s. Zalkowitsch compared Stravinsky's creative process with Beethoven's — there are 25 known variations of the coda to the final movement of the Fifth Symphony — and said the manuscript is comparable in importance to Beethoven's sketches. There is a lot of work to be done before we write down what is given to us. What a composer finally publishes is totally different from what he struggles to clarify at first. Being able to document the creative process is highly important.

■ Smith Sculpture Anctioned for $572,000

A David Smith stainless-steel sculpture brought $572,000 at anction in New York, establishing a record price for the artist and exceeding by 21/2 times the previous auction record for a Smith work, The Washington Post reported. Record prices also were set for contemporary artists Robert Rauschenberg, Richard Lindner and Richard Diebenkorn, Smith's "2 Doors" (1964), was the top lot of a sale of the collection of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Gosman held at Christie's. A total of $3,603,960, including the 10 percent buyer's premium, was paid for 47 works of art from the last 50 years. Rauschenberg's "Studio Painting" (1960-1961) was sold for $385,000 to a private New York collector. Rauschenberg was awarded $3,200 for the painting at the 1964 Venice Biennale where the picture was first exhibited. Lindner's "The Walk" (1961) was sold for $220,000 to the Donald Morris Gallery in Detroit for a private collector. Diebenkom's "Seared Nude-Black Background" (1961) was sold for $198,000 to Mr. and Mrs. Jay Schidler, private collectors from Honolulu.

ionai Herald Tribune PARIS - The dazzling show de-voted to 4,000 years of Irish art and artifacts (at the Grand Palais to Jan. 17) has the 15th century as its most recent limit, a date that clearly marks the beginning of Ireland's tragic destiny. British sovereignty over the island began earli-er, but the policies which evoked Swift's fierce but unavailing deri-sion began in the 16th century. The Ireland represented in this exhibition is consequently a country which is still fully itself, with a try which is still fully itself, with a political structure rooted in the country's prehistory, characterized by a tribal social organization with specific notions of property and individuality.

This is relevant to the splendid pieces shown here, from the henge engravings (represented on the walls of the exhibition halls by painted patterns) up to the 12th century, with its elaborately decorated pieces of goldsmithing. A constant trait is the proliferating curvilinear grapevine of decoration curvilinear grapevine of decoration which invades and enhances every available space.

A specialist will naturally be more conscious of the discontinuities that can be detected over the millenia — suffice to note the success of Christianity in the fifth century or the Viking penetration during the 10th century. But the Viking contribution does not seem at all foreign to the forms originating from Ireland itself, and Irish Christianity assumed forms already naove to the island.

Whether one considers a piece of jewelry from the seventh century B.C. or a page from the Book of Kells dating from the minth century, one is immediately struck by that fascinating and yet somewhat alien ornateness whose seduction obvious even when its significance is oot directly perceptible. The Book of Kells, which is on view at the Grand Palais, is a copy of the Gospels in Latin inscribed on 340 folios of parchment and represents the sum of the accom-plishments of the island's arts, to quote it's curator, William O'Sulli-

The patterns which characterize its illuminations attain an excep-tional degree of complexity and perfection. Although similar degns of woven ribbons appear in other areas of Western European art, nowhere do they attain such intricacy and inventiveness.

If we are to understand the significance of these patterns we must, I suspect, return to the tribal ootion which is central to the society which produced them, for their tightly woven lines appear like the materialization of the close-knit tribal texture that filled each per-son's world. Peasant cultures, for instance in Central Europe, present similar traits, the interwoven lines and the horror vacui that marks folk art almost everywhere.

sented appears to have been a country in a constant state of social tension, indeed of quasi-anarchy, even in the high days of the brilliant monastic culture (also a collective form, incidentally) which, in the sixth and seventh centuries, made Ireland one of the major centers of Western civilization. This turmoil contributed its thrust to the established ornamental tradition and incited the monks to give even more elaborate intensity to something that could, in their intuitive view, represent the essential óes of the Christian body

Aside from that, there is a quite different aspect to this sort of work, and that is the spirit of play and paradox that also finds its ex-pression in such elaborate forms rightened by human and animal

The exhibition makes plenty of room for prehistoric jewelry and weapons that splendidly display the craft of the goldsmiths in those distant days. But very modest objects have their perfection too. Anyone with a feeling for modern design can only be fascinated by a small stone ax (between 1600 and 1300 B.C.) that blends quasi-industrial simplicity and formal elo-quence. The harp that appears in the arms of Ireland is also represented - in the present case it is a 15th-century instrument which was, at one time, believed to have belonged to the 11th-century monarch Brian Boru.

Reliquaries, croziers, bells, fibuias, graven bones, horns, torques, lance heads, shields and even unidentified objects all serve to illustrate the peculiar Irish genius, which, unlike the spirit of other barbarian lands of western Enrope, was not severed from itself by the culture of Rome and which when Christianity was brought to the island by one of its own sons in the fifth century, shaped that faith

This last was found in a burial chamber that contained, in addition to the skeleton of a priest-king, five sacrificial victim

The third group of sculptures in the exhibition, are from Ile-Ife. Ife, the capital city of the Yoruba peo-ple, is said in Yoruba tradition to have been founded by Oduduwa, one of 16 deities sent by the all-powerful god Olodumare to create and people the earth. Ife has been the Yoruba capital for centuries. The bronzes, coppers and terracot-tas discovered there date from the classical lie period, from the 11th to the 15th centuries. They represent priests, kings, queens and deities; they are in every respect comparable in the West to the masterworks of the Renaissance, and in the East to the Sung and Ming bronzes of China, and the Asuka period sculptures of Japan. Perhaps the most interesting lie work in the show is the mask in cast copper (a process extremely difficult to do successfully) said to

who is reputed to have introduced the art of working metals to Ife. The pierced holes at the hairline, beneath the ears and around the lips are believed to have been made to accommodate real hair. Some 80 miles from Ife is the town of Owo, traditionally founded by the youngest son of Oduva of Ife. Certainly the city was and is peopled by the Yoruba, which would argue a common origin; and the art of the two places has definite affinities. The Owo sculptures, dating from around the 15th century, are again terracottas, of a more fragmentary nature than the others and with a strong emphasis on the theme of sacrifice a woman holding a cockerel, a hand proferring a small animal, two bejeweled forearms, the hands holding a ram's bead.

As Owo infloence waned, Benin influence grew, and with it the Benin bronzes with which the West is more familiar than with most other arts of Africa. The pride of the Benin exhibits is without doubt the pair of mid-16th-century bronze leopards made for a roya ancestral altar. (The leopard was the Benin symbol of majesty). The Oba of Benin kept live leopards at court. It is clear that though highly stylized, this bronze pair depended on close and accurate observation

ARTS AND ANTIQUES

A painting is held up for auction at the Hotel Drouot. A 23-million franc contingent of works owned by Maeght's heirs was recently sold at the Drouot.

A New Vitality Noted in French Auction, Trade Market

PARIS — The new factor on the international art market this year is the surprising vitality of the French market at auction and in

At auction, the evidence has just been provided by the October sales. The first indications that something was brewing in Paris came from the bottom end of the market. At the daily sales of miscellaneous wares, junk is up by 30 percent to 50 percent over the spring level.

tance due to low quality, bad condition or simply general lack of in-terest have been fetching relatively high prices. In take the latest instance, at an auction of antiquities from the Ancient World conducted by Paul Renaud on Oct. 29, a Greek pottery jug of the Geomet-ric period, about 7th-century B.C., went up to 1,620 francs, although

It might be Objets d'art of minimal impor- worth balf that price in London and put together." It might be worth balf that price in London and would probably not be sold as a separate lot.

For anybody wanting to dispose of low-priced objets d'art, Paris is definitely the place these days. The reason is simple enough. A real panic has been set off among small-time dealers and lower-in-come French people by the two de-valuations of the franc and the the expert Jean Roudillon had can-prospect of a third to come. Anything tangible seems preferable to melting currency — an absurd view, economically speaking, but a powerful psychological incentive. Among sophisticated collectors with limited financial means, of which there are many in France, the inflation scare has canceled the effect of the unemployment scare, hence the boost that could be detected at the sale of antiquities. The new dynamic that is now making itself felt in the upper end of the market is a different story altogether. It has just been illus-trated at auction by the sale of Modern Master paintings and sculptures owned by the heirs of Aimé Maeght, France's foremost dealer in modern art during the post-World War II era.

What makes the event remarkable is that none of the works of art auctioned off by Guy Loudmer for a net 23 million francs qualifies as a masterpiece. They were standard specimens put up for sale to pay for death duties.

The publicity stunt performed by Guy Loudmer is in itself a work of art. The French auctioneer created the impression that a great man's collection - the latter word featured prominently on the catalog cover - was being dispersed; while it was, in fact, a selection of what had been his stock-in-trade. The media fell for the trick to a and helped created the right elimate in which works that would get a mere nod in a dealer's gallery were turned into coveted treasures from Maeght's own

Two late Chagalls, "Arbre Rouge," 1966, and "Musicien sur Fond Rose" 1968-1971, which like all rehashes of the painter's earlier work gave one the feeling of having seen them 100 times before, each went up to 1.98 million francs. Fernand Leger's "La Belle Cycliste," 1951, was knocked down at just over 3 million francs. Unless this was run up by a dealer anxious to establish a high price level to bolster his own stock, this makes little sense. The trade price would be closer to 2 million francs.

In the bysterical atmosphere of the auction, with the public filling tively crazy at 1.81 million francs. A year ago a similar bust numbered 3 was sold for $115,000, then worth 644,000 francs, at Sotheby Parke Bernet in New York, Armless busts such as this one, which almost looks like a derivative Daumier, do not represent Giacometti's supreme achievement in bronze. This is rather to be sought in tall, thin silhouettes such as those in "La Clairière," sold for record $360,000 at Sotheby Parke Bernet in May 1981.

The whole performance looked like one of those coups staged precisely by Sotheby's, except that this time the producer was a French auctioneer and the setting Paris. It is too soon to tell whether Paris can follow up the Maeght auction, but it convincingly shows that, given the will, Paris could make it. It is the first time that this demonstration has been made on a larger financial scale in that most sensitive of all fields, Modern

There will be a second important sale later this month. On Nov. 25, Erie Buffetand will disperse a substantial number of works, including a key drawing by Marcel Duchamp, sculpture by Laurens. and a very good Cézanne. If that second trial gallop is successful, it will mean that a turning point has been reached on the auction scene.

That things are stirring right now is demonstrated, among others, by the fact that no less than 15 lots in Buffetand's sale have been entrusted to him by another auc tion group, Audap-Godean-So-lanet. They rightly thought that it makes better sense to have a bigger sale than one medium-size sale plus a minor one, their own. Three years ago attitudes would have been different.

Interestingly, the possible auc-tion revival coincides with an unquestionable renaissance in the trade. The Paris Antique Dealers' Biennale at the Grand Palais turned out to be a great success. Expensive 18th century sold well. Americans bought heavily but there were also some French col-

This is a portrait of a wistful young girl done in 1792 by Jean-mail Mosnier and is perhaps more than 2 million francs, but Al-berto Giacometti's bronze bust "Annette," numbered 6, was posi-tively crazy at 1.81 million francs. included in Maurice Segoura's exhibition "From Watteau to David: A century of French Art" in April-

Crisis in World Art Market: Upward Price Spiral Broken

By Souren Melikian

PARIS — For years professionals wondered what would happen when prices stopped zooming up on the art market. The upward spiral is now broken. The seemingly endless ascension came to a balt last

Yet they still are not quite sure what will or even what is actually happening. Nn economic crisis is as complex as the art market crisis, which is just beginning to reveal its full extent and is likely to worsen in the next few months.

The most visible indication that something was going wrong came in July when the world's two main auction houses, Sotheby's and Christie's, released their seasonal figures. In an interim report released on July 9, Sotheby's admitted that its worldwide sales were 25 percent down from the previous financial year. For the first time in two decades, the company would be in the red; and, in order to make up for losses and reduce its excessive indebtedness, it was disposing of some buildings and closing several re-gional offices in Britain. The Los Angeles auction room would be shut down and the building sold. This was intended to make up for Sotheby's losses, expected in exceed £2 million.

Christie's may not be going through quite such dif-ficult straits but its news is hardly more ebeering. During the past season net sales worldwide were down by 10 percent. The financial year was concluded with a profit so small as to be virtually nonexis-

With the single exception of this newspaper, commentators accounted for the unglamorous results by attributing them to the world recession. Attention was monopolized by a secondary problem, Sotheby's financial troubles. Little attempt was made to consider in detail the real causes of Sotheby's and Christie's poor showing, which is, perhaps, not surprising. To an outsider, the pattern that emerged from the year's sales was so inconsistent as in make no sense.

The most dramatic feature was a sharp increase in bought-in items. In the past season, Sotheby's had two resounding failures, made all the worse as they had been preceded by an unusual volume of press releases praising to high beaven the glorious works of art to be sold.

First there was a hoard of gold and silver belt fittngs supposed to have been excavated somewhere in Albania and to relate to a branch of the nomadic Huns called the Avars, who were roaming Central Europe in the late seventh century. Sotheby's press office bombarded the media with advance notices on the splendid job done by an Oxford laboratory in dating the items. Using a refined method of Carbon-14 dating that allows the analysis of minute quantities of vegetal material, the scientists had established a convenient date of circa late seventh century to mideighth century A.D. for some fragments of textiles in Sotheby's expert speculated that two Byzantine silver dishes in poor condition but undoubtedly genuine had been found with the fittings as part of an Avar 'hoard." Unfortunately collectors, particularly those aware that the collection of belt fittings-cum-dishes had been floating on the market for some time, displayed distressing skepticism. Despite the luxurious hardcover catalog specially devoted to the assortment under the glamorizing denomination "The Avar Trea-sure," the "hoard" was a flop. Only three lots, among the lesser-priced items from the supposed hoard, reached their reserve prices. Eventually, sources said, even these were sent back to Sotheby's by their buyers who rejected them because their authenticity was not recognized by outside sources. Then there was the unfortunate Mizne business. Early in January, Sotheby's spokesmen began to contact the media with a story that the most fabulous "private collection" of Impressionist and modern masters was up for sale. A presale piece on the big event to come, it was suggested, would be a scoop.

In this world, alas, there are not many "unknown" collections of major importance. It took only a few phone calls to find out that what was meant by the private collection were paintings owned by Mizné, a real estate agent based in Monte Carla. Keenly interested in art and determined to get it cheaply, Mizné is known to every dealer that matters. Informed sources say be has bought from many of them, each time struggling to get bargain prices and later tantalizing an equally large number with one or another of his paintings offered at prices leaving him a buge profit. This is hardly the way to become a popular figure in the dealing-collecting world.

The sale, on March 30 at Sotheby's, London, did include some remarkable works, including a highly important Mondrian of the early cubist abstractionist period and an equally major Kandinsky, but none that could be called a novelty in the market. Dealers made sure that word got around that the mystery fig-ure was Mizné. An unflattering article came out in The New York Times shortly before the sale. Worst of all. Mizné kept raising his reserves, Sotheby's later whispered in laudiy audible tones, which scaled the fate of the sale. The Mondrian went for £660,000, but the star piece, a Kandinsky, was bought in. Two-thirds of the sale in value were unsold.

Individual failures in every field have also greatly

On the face of it, there seems to be no link between such daily accidents and the imprudent policy fol-lowed by Sotheby's on the "Avar Treasure" and the Mizne belongings. In actual fact, the root of the prob-lem is the same in both cases. It is the worsening penury of available works of art.

In their desperate struggle in get goods for sale, auction houses tend to lose their traditional caution, either in accepting unrealistically high reserve prices from vendors or even, once in a while, in giving way to enthusiasm too easily. Handling items that have been lying about in the market for some years and raise as many questions as the "Avar Treasure" can never be the easiest of undertakings. Sotheby's highly competent directors in charge of the departments concerned with each case must bave known better than anyone that they were taking a gamble. My hunch is that only the current shortage of works of art can account for their willingness in do so.

Indeed, the penury is now reaching a point where whole categories have been virtually taken out of the market. Gone are the days when medieval art was plentiful. Great Impressionists that were the prow figure of the market in the early 1970s hardly turn up at auction anymore. Great masters of the first balf of the 20th century have gradually taken their place but here, too, the supply problem is already making itself felt. And the list of the vanished categories or, refining the matter, types of objects could be extended ad

Several reasons account for the artistic penury. By definition the art of the past does not grow in numbers. Its sum total physically decreases through loss, destruction or partial damage. Of the amount still available on the market, a large proportion is being gobbled up by museums.

Increasing attention by governments to art acquisitions is accelerating the process, partly as a result of the publicity in the media. There were no regular art market columns treating sales as news items in the great dailies or weeklies 20 years ago: The first one anywhere in the world was inaugurated by this writer in this paper in March 1969, followed later by The Times of London.

The multiplication of museums in the New World South Africa, Australia, the Far East and the Middle East has recently stepped up the pumping at the top. Increasing numbers of private art buyers have done the same in the lower echelons of the market. Unlike museums, individual buyers do not take the objects out of the circuit for ever, but by being more numerous and far more scattered geographically than ever before, they remove them from the race track more

Normally this phenomenon should have generated a gradual rise in prices. Instead, auction houses drastically altered the process through their intense competition, which is, again, a relatively new phenome-(Continued on Page 10S)

Islamic Art Label Covers a Diverse Range of Cultures

PARIS — Growing rarity affects various categories differently. It will stimulate prices in the bet-ter-known areas and can, on the contrary, have perverse effects on the more obscure corners of the

An extreme case is offered by the broad range of works of art from an even broader spectrum of cultures lumped together under the denomination "Islamic." This has just been spectacularly illustrated at auction in London and on a lesser scale in Paris.

In a field that is well-known, a sense of proportion is by and large maintained. Prices do not zoom up one day only to sink six months later. When a drawing by Dürer came up at Sotheby's sale in June 1978, it soared to £713,600 even though it does not rank among the master's greatest pieces. This year, the study of a wing done in his manner, probably by an artist working in his studio, if not even one of his immediate successors, brought £75,600 at Christie's. This. too, may be considered enormous. But, compared with the previous price, a scale is respected, the genuine article going for nine times the price of the hypothetical one.

In other words, extreme rarity, far from destabilizing the market for German Renaissance drawings. is boosting it. Exposure to such drawings on the market is rare, but Dürer's image is present in the Cultivated Moslems from the Middle East must have shuddered on reading the description of lot 18, a fragmentary revetment tile of the 13th century identified as a oriented toward Mecca, which Moslems face when saying their prayers. The fragment is decorated with a cross-legged figure molded in low relief under an arch in-scribed with wishes addressed to a prince; it must have formed part of the tile revetment of some Iranian princely mansion. To have that as a mihrab, whether in a mosque or a dwelling, would be virtual sacrilege to any Moslem: To prostemate himself to a human figure, while praying, would smack of idolatry, the supreme sin in Islam.

Two candlesticks called "Persian" — meaning Iranian — were located in Siirt, historically an Arenian city in present-day Turkey If this was done on historical grounds - the area was under the sovereignty of the Mongol dynasty ruling Iran at the time — the cata-log did not say so. Elsewhere, a textile inscribed in an early 11thcentury script was ascribed to "Anatolia, 11th century" - when Anatolia had no Islamic art.

Amsterdam's New Artists Reject '60s, Return to 'Paintsmanship'

By Mark J. Kurlansky A MSTERDAM — "The painting is dead. Long live the painting," Frank Gribling, a Dutch art crinic, wrote in the 1960s. Today, when Heindrick Driessen, spokesman for Amsterdam's contemporary Stedelijk Museum, is asked to describe new Dutch art, the first word that comes to his mind is "painting."

protest art, experimental art, hap-penings. In 1965 artist Stanley Bronwn created a work called "This Way Brouwn," which consisted of asking directions on the streets of Amsterdam. Robert on landscapes. He is now working on landscapes. An important element in his work is the elaborate mous from being arrested for wooden frames that he carves for mous from being arrested for painting the letter K. for cancer, on cigarette advertising. Amster-dam's Gallerie 845 was showing Pieter Engels' "repaired furniture, which had been sawed apart and reconstructed at askew angles.

But by 1973, Engels was doing oil on canvas landscapes. In the past decade the leaders of earlier avant-garde movements in the Netherlands have one by one abandoned intellectualism and started unveiling traditional oil paintings. Now there is an entire new generation of Dutch artists ingly inescapable heritage of a nation that produced Hals, Rembrandt, van Gogh, van Dongen, Mondrian and other masters of brush technique.

Many of the younger painters, such as Rene Daniels, 33, from Eindhoven, do work of serious paintmanship with brush technique that unabashedly turns back to the International Position The 1960s was the era of social to the Impressionists and Postim-protest art, experimental art, hap-pressionists. Hans van Hock, 35, from North Brabant, has done evocative still lifes of rich colora-tion and studies of El Greco his paintings. Wim Izaks, 32, from Gelderland, does still lifes and landscapes with brush strokes and compositions that show influences from de Vlaminck and Matisse. This trend is very much in step with the international art scene of which Amsterdam has become a part in the past two decades.

Important movements began to spring up in Amsterdam after. World War II. In 1948 there was Cobra (Copenhagen, Brussels, Amsterdam), a group of artists who tried to excite the creative urge in their audience by childlike images and folk figures in often nightmarish flights of expression that reflected the borror of the recent war. In 1960 another important movement, Zero, was born in Amsterdam. Zero artists, the reverse of expressionists, believed that the subjective expression of the artist should be kept to a minithe artist should be kept to a mini-mum. Armando, horn in Amster-dam in 1929, presented 6 x White, which was six matching pieces of tin sheeting painted white. Along with new ideas, art-ists had started looking for new materials, rejecting oil on canvas for tin, cardboard, plastic or assorted scraps.

In spite of important ideas, artists and museums (the Stedelijk was one of the first museums in Europe to acquire works by Jackson Pollock in the 1950s), Amsterdam was not an important art cen-ter in 1960. It bad lost native artists to New York and Paris and had attracted few foreign artists.

In the past 20 years that has changed. Today instead of the four or five galleries of 1960, there are 60 galleries. There has also been a remarkable increase in the number of young Dusch artists. The art schools have become packed. One reason for this was the increased affluence of society. Another was the state support for the arts in the form of the BKR, or Artists Bene-

Artists who are accepted by the. program in their municipality are given salaried incomes in exchange for turning over works. The program, financed by the Social Afairs Ministry and not the Culture Ministry, determines pay based on family and other needs of the art-

But Timen van Grootheest, curator of the Fodor Museum and an Amsterdam commissioner for the benefits program, said, "Art should not allow itself to be in a position where commissions make who are again reveling in the craft decisions." His advice to young of oil on canvas that is the seemsionland." He believes the benefits system makes artists complacent because they are regularly re-viewed and have to placate the ommission's tastes to maintain

The acquisitions are rented cheaply to the public but in Amsterdam the municipality has be-come immdated with works of art. Mr. van Grootheest said that the commission meets for three hours every week to acquire $185,000 worth of new Amsterdam art or, as Mr. Driessen put it, "a de Koonig every week or 25 Picassos a year."

Some artists reject the benefits program, preferring to take their chances in the market. Others, even some who are shown at the Stedelijk, are not accepted. Certain kinds of art, including photograpby, do not qualify.

The benefits program probably has had an effect on Amsterdam art. The 20 percent subsidies it gave, until 1979, to galleries that displayed inexpensive work by Dutch artists probably played a role in the profusion of galleries. It also reduced the risk in being an experimental gallery that presents unknown artists. unknown artists.

Eventually the experimentation seemed to turn retrospectively to the roots of what was once called modern art. Constant, born in Amsterdam in 1920, and a leader of the Cobra movement, had stopped painting to work on his vision of an artists' utopia. He shocked the Dutch art world in 1975 with a show of new works, haunting allegorical paintings with parallels to such traditional painters as Courbet of the 19th century. He said he was returning to traditional painting because he had decided the only thing left for him to do was "whatever I felt like doing."

The Zero leader, Armando, is now 53 and living in Berlin where be is painting in black and white. His work, large black flags or an excruciating thick black line titled "The Behavior of the Enemy," seems haunted by his youthful memories of war. The brush technique is impressive.

Jan Schoonhoven, 68, another founder of the Zero movement, is building three-dimensional white ground. It gives the impression of a sculptor's painting colored by the shifting shadows.

Jan Dibbets and Ger van Elk

are both Amsterdam artists of the 1960s who have acquired international reputations. In 1968 Dibbets strung barbed wire fences in an Amsterdam gallery with a tape recording of ocean waves playing be-hind them. Ger van Elk created a fire hazard in another Amsterdam gallery with a work consisting of light bulbs slowly burning holes in wallpaper. Now both are 41 and doing photography in classic painting motifs. Van Elk in-paints

As early as 1966 artists such as Alphons Freijmuth and Reiner Lu-cassen began rebeling against the "painting is dead" movement. They have shown themselves to be masterful painters. Lucassen's work moves effortlessly between abstract and figurative. The star-tling, colorful work of Freijmuth often sets figurative subjects such as portraits in abstract settings that parody the blue, red and yel-low compositions of Mondrian.

The new generation of Dutch painters bas gone even farther back into traditional painting, leaving the intellectuals to ponder if 20th-century art is going to fin-

A telling sign of the Paris revival is the outburst of activity from little-known dealers. On the Rue Mazarine just off the Boulevard Saint-

Islamic Art: Wide Range

oonsense are the weaknesses displayed in assessing the authenticity of the works. This is the result of the poor state of scholarship but also of insufficient exposure to the also of insufficient exposure to the objects. A striking case was that of a bowl of 17th-century shape decorated in vaguely 12th-century style. The cataloger, unaware that it had been published before — as genuine — merely referred to the provecance, a famous collection. This of was withdrawn before the cale. lot was withdrawn before the sale. An even more improbable piece was oot. Described as "A large Eastern Islamie gold inlaid bronze bowl ...14th century," it combines a shape widely used by Iranian potters from the 17th century to the 19th century, figurative scenes in 13th-century style inspired from Iranian painted wares, and non-sensical lettering in pseudo-archaie style oot unfamiliar to those who bave seen the production of the Tehran bazaar made early in this century. Interestingly, the discrepancies did not stop the piece from being knocked down at £7,805. making it a rather expensive lesson in art history. Growing rarity has another consequence oo any field. The same pieces show a tendeocy to reappear at intervals. Several objects in Sotheby's sale were old friends. A 14th-century bowl from Iran last seen at a Paris auction on March 9, 1978, and knocked down at 35,570 francs, reappeared as lot 37 and went for £10,973. A 14th-century candlestick, lot 36, had been sold in Paris on Dec. 10. 1976, for 44,570 francs. It now reached £7,582.

the leflovers of a transaction concluded in Geneva not so long ago while others had been floating around the London scene. A 12thcentury rectangular tray sold at Christie's to the most reputable Londoo firm for £613 on April 20, 1979, was knocked down at Sotheby's on Oct. 13 to another dealer at £245. It is all incoherent; but again not nousual oor even mysterious.

Wheo the art supply gets scarce in a field that is poorly researched and therefore difficult to assess, buyers become equally rare. Dealers often buy with, perhaps, only two or three targets in mind. If the prospective clients show oo interest for whatever reason, they often eboose to get rid of the unwanted bject at auction. Most of the time, it is dooe less conspicuously. A 12th-century bronze casket from Iran, which had cost a London gallery £468 at Christie's on April 20, 1979, as lot 18, was quietly dis-

Needless to say, this is only con-ceivable in a field where actors are so uncertain about what is what, that prices are completely arbitrary and subject to wild varia-tions, not perceptibly related to quality or trends in taste. There is no earthly reason wby a pottery tile from the Turkish city of Iznik datable to circa 1530-1550 should have fetched only £502 on Oct. 12, while a globe decorated in 16th-posed of at Sotheby's fast sale of Oct. 20, 1982, as lot 128 for identified as such in the catalog by £100.35. £2,230. The two finest 12th-century bowls in the sale were respectively knocked down at £892 and £1,170, below or close to the estimate, while a pitcher of the early 13th century mysteriously ascended to £34,565, 120 percent above the highest estimate, which already struck one as madly optimistic. Indeed, giving estimates in such a field is hopeless or, one should per-haps say, meaningless.

The contrast with, say, Far Eastern art, which has a wide following in three continents and has been the object of in-depth scholarly study for decades, and which is further represented on the market in much larger quantities, is strik-ing. The latter lends itself to a measure of rational analysis. The closer to a Thousand and One Nights tale with the Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves theme looming

Paris: Group Initiative on the Left Bank

PARIS — Paris galleries often tend to remind one of mortuary chapels and people passing in the street seem to feel that since they were oot acquainted with the deceased they have oo excuse for going in.

As a result the recent initiative of the 20 or more galleries and shops on the Left Bank's Rue Guenegaud to bold a collective opening was a fortunate and sucopening was a formate and suc-cessful initiative. The street and the galleries were jammed with people, cars were crazily parked all around the area and traffic inched through the street, taking pains to avoid members of brass bands and smaller increases playing out. smaller jazz groups playing out-doors, despite the occasional drizzle, and periodically seeking refuge in a cafe for a drink.

Among the participating galleries were Le Dessin, which is showing theater director Bob Wilson's sketches for "Great Day in the Morning," a joint venture with the American soprano, Jessye Nor-man, who sang spirituals in this recent Parisian event, and for "Medea," a play still in the planning stage.

Isy-Brachot oext door was show-ing paintings of old-guard surreal-ist Felix Labisse, while Jean Briance has an extremely varied and often amusing show devoted to the subject of "le baiser" ("the Kiss") to Nov. 25, as it has been treated by contemporary artists. Marion Meyer is showing pamtings by sec-ond-generation surrealist Ljuba until Nov. 13, while La Pochade chose "artist's palettes from 1900 to 1982" as a pretext for their sbow, which runs to Nov. 27.

Visitors to Paris who want to Visitors to Paris who want to tour the galleries will find two helpful publications. The first is "L'Officiel des Galeries," which can be found at any large newsstand and which lists galleries alphabetically under Left Bank, Right Bank and Beaobourg headings, and artists alphabetically with the names of the galleries handling their work. handling their work.

The second is referred to as "L'Affiche des Galeries," although this name does oot appear anywhere oo it. It is less complete but more practical for out-of-town visi-tors, being a single folded sheet de-voted to current shows on the Left Bank and in the Beaubourg district and providing maps of both dis-tricts that indicate the location of the galleries. Rome Galleries: Focus on Contemporary Art serving a kitschy new figurativism.

By Edith Schloss

ROME — Breathing the history-laden air of ancient Rome, one wooders how it is that its gallery activity is less traditional and has become a better showcase for modern art, especially American art, than that of the much newer Milan in ftaly's industrialized north, of other European art cen-ters, and in a way even that of Paris, too long resting on its laurels. There are several reasons for this: Rome is after all the capital of a relatively new country, put together from a scattering of city states only a 100 years ago, and artists, who are the ones to create the right climate for art, always flock to the capital. Theo after World War 11 and the long isola-tion under fascism, the cootact with Western developments, which had been cut, was taken up with all the more vigor. New abstraction equaled new liberty; and the coosciousness of living in a minor center, far from the admired French enlightened intellectual approach, and even further from American devil-may-care, nonhistorical pragmatism, has always made everyone keep oo their toes.

In the late 1950s the best galler-ies here, after having launched indigent abstraction and then an Italian version of pop art, were among the first in Europe to introduce Americans. So Obelisco gave Robert Rauschenberg his first ra Grisi and Brenda Miller. Both houses went out of their way to build up glamorous sales to get famous collections. In order to attract powerful collectors, they produced better and better catalogs, agreed to expensive promotional efforts, such as presale travwhere the most prestigious sales often bring little or no revenue at School and is the cornerstone on prices, which auction houses are all to the auctioneer.

Finally, to their effort to entice vendors, auction houses have come to accept higher and higher reserve prices. By playing off one auction house against the other, some highpowered sellers get them to agree all the more easily to their conditions, a fatal process that led to last year's failures.

That the crisis is not the result of a sudden shortage of cash perceptible in other areas of the economy is strongly suggested by the second striking feature of the mar-ket in the past season. Apparently contradicting the first feature -the increasing number of failures — enormous prices have been paid for various items in every category. Last November, Christie's sold for £418,000 a suit of armor commissioned between 1610 and 1613 by Henry, Prince of Wales. True. its importance cannot be overemphasized. The work of William Pickering, it is the only documented specimen of the Greenwich which the existence of the school was established.

Other huge prices fetched in the early summer by works of art that were anything but outstanding are far more telling. In July at Chris-ue's, again unheard of prices were paid for second- to third-rate works hy famous English masters. The justification lay essentially in the signatures and io the conformity of some of the paionings to the broad idea that the public has of what such works look like. An 1823 full-length portrait by Henry Raeburn, stilled and boring, went then too weak to reject.

So far the result has been not so much a drop in prices — the re-serve system artificially keeps them up — but ao increase io fail-ures to sell when the reserves are not being met at auction. Thus, the combination of the increasing number of unsold works and of gigantic prices paid for various items, far from being ioconsistent, are the twin products of an unhealthy market. The current world economic recession may have had a worsening effect, but it is not the fundamental source of the trouble. If anything it has. helped conceal the real nature of the problem.

A general readjustment is becoming argent. In the middle term, far-reaching changes in the entire market are probably inevitable. The answer to the rarefaction of references used by speculators works for sale cannot simply be an when they lasist on high reserve endless rise in prices, as last season's results have demonstrated However arbitrary the price for art may be - it reflects the intensity of desire, which is irrational by definition — o certain relationship between it and the general price level of the economy must be maintaided. Beyond a certain level, desire gets quelled by fear, that of being unable ever to get one's money back.

I suspect that a concentration process is under way. The number of auctions end, presumably, auction groups will decrease. The reserve price system will be some-how modified. Not least of all, good dealers — that is, those shrewd enough to think that vendors should not be treated as vietims to be ransomed, but on the contrary should be treated with jost as much consideration as wealthy buyers — will find them-selves in a position of strength. Quietly negotiating the work of art in the best interest of all parties is, after all, very much the essence of

On the cootrary, as has long been the case, the collector and connoisseur may find in London a gallery to cater to his 200 yards (180 meters) houses 15 own taste, be it never so esoteric.

In one respect, however, there has been a great resurgence in London, in the case of Oriental art. Stimulated by the 1973-1974
"Geaius of China" exhibition; by the "World of Islam" festival of 1976; by the "Great Japan Exhibitioo" of last winter; and by the sixmooth "Festival of India," which is just coming to an end, the arts of the East have reassumed the importance they had on the London gallery scene in the 1890s and early

The other recent change in gal-lery practice in Loodon has been occasioned by tremendous increases in real estate prices. Many of the old-established galleries own freehold or have long-term leases.
Those less fortunate have been compelled to seek cheaper venues, which by and large entails moving out from the center.

This phenomenoo has caused the growth of the Belgravia complex, centered on Motcomh Street, djacent to and in which are 14 or 15 galleries, with shows ranging

Brezhnev's Death Offers Chance For Rebuilding East-West Trade

NEW YORK — The death of Leonid I. Brezhnev presents Washington with economic opportunities and well as political hazards, at a tion with economic opportunities and well as political nazards, at a time when the Western democracies are deeply divided over military and economic issues. The two are closely linked because of the heavy financial burdens that military spending places on the strained Western economic Western Europe's terms.

But on the military side, Mr. Reagan has clung to his plans for a very rapid military buildup. He and his secretary of defense, Caspar Weinberger, base this program on their conception of a rapidly widening Soviet military threat to the United States and the West, Mr. Reagan and Mr. Weinberger are determined to fight off any significant reductions io military spending, even though the slowing of inflation means a still higher rate of increase in military spending in real terms.

They are holding to this line in the face of the evidence of public opinion polls and of the election itself that the public wants more social programs to deal with the problem of unemployment, with less money going to the military.

going to the military.

But Mr. Reagan, speaking through his side, Edwin Meese 3d, has continued to oppose a larger public jobs program, arguing that he wanted to stimulate economic recovery in other ways. And Mr. Weinberger has continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist that the military program is good for the economic recovery in the continued to insist the continued to the contin my and produces jobs.

Concern for Economy

There is opposing concern, however, that higher military expenditures will worsen budget deficits and keep pressure on interest rates, putting a drag on economic growth and worsening the problems of the United States and problems. States and world economy

The weakened state of the economies in the Western world has increased the importance of East-West trade to the Europeans. Real ecooomic growth this year is estimated to be nil in West Germany, 1.5 percent in France, 0.8 percent in Britain and 0.9 percent in Italy. Recovery in these countries is stalled.

And the outlook for 1983 is not much brighter: The Organization for And the outlook for 1983 is not much brighter. The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development is expecting real growth in Westero Europe to average no better than 1 or 2 percent next year. Under those conditions, unemployment, already the highest that Western Europe has experienced since World War II, is likely to worsen next year, averaging 10 percent or more of the labor force.

European industries thus are likely to push for sales wherever they can get them, whatever the resistance of the Reagan administration. Even Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, despite her ideological sympathy with Mr. Reagan, sharply opposed his effort to hold up the gas pipeline, in part because of the effects on British contracts, and thus on the British economy.

A New Chance

All io all, if the new Soviet leaders indicate a desire to expand trade with the West, Western Europe and Japan probably would respond There is clear motivation on the Soviet side to increase East-West trade, and particularly the flow of resources — financial and technological — from the West: The Soviet economy is stagnant, and this has increased pressures on the Kremlin to improve living conditions.

The economic strain of Poland and, to a lesser extent, the other satellite countries, also make enhanced trade desirable for the Soviet Union. Mr. Brezhnev's death could thus present the Reagan administration with a challenge to reorder its relations with Moscow and simultaneously to expand cooperation with its allies in Europe and Japan. Obviously, however, this will also depend on whether Mr. Brezhnev's successor is willing to explore new opportunities in the West. The New York Times

Shuttle Launch Opens New Era for Satellites

By Andrew Pollack Yew York Times Service

NEW YORK - The successful launching of a satellite by the space shuttle Columbia Thursday promises to usber in a new era of lower prices and new capabilities for satellite communications, according to several experts. But they added that it will take several years to realize the full benefits.

"It will be a magnificent tool for the satellite business," said Robert C. Hall, president of Satellite Business Systems, the company whose satellite was lifted into low earth orbit by the shuttle and then sent into higher orbit by a separate

The shuttle promises immediately to lower launching costs compared to the use of expendable rockets. It also will allow for larger, more powerful satellites to be placed into orbit than is possible with expendable rockets.

Most satellites designed for launching in the next few years, however will not take advantage of the extra capacity of the shuttle Because the shuttle program fell several years behind schedule, satellite companies have designed sa-tellites that could also be be launched by more usual means in case the shuttle was not ready. "Intelsat has had to keep its eggs in all the baskets," said Gavin Trevitt, spokesman for the Inter-national Telecommunications Satellite Organization, a consortium of 106 countries that provides international satellite communications. Because Intelsat satellites are already designed for use in the oext few years, the consortium will not be able to capitalize on the advantages offered by the shuttle for the forescenble future, Mr. Trevitt-

If the launching of the two satel-lites succeeds on this mission, however, it might clear the way for new designs. "It is a milestone that has to be crossed to give the industry confidence," said Philip Schneider, vice president in charge of satellite operations for Western Union.

Satellite communications is a booming business. There are almost 100 military and civilian communications satellites in orbit. The United States has 16 commercial communications satellites, and many more are to be launched in the next few years.

Those satellites are used for some long-distance telephone calls, for high-speed data communications and for distribution of television programs. Most pay television services, such as Home Box Office, use satellites to distribute programs to cable television operators. Starting in the mid-1980s, sa-tellites are to be used to broadcast television programs directly to

An immediate advantage of using the space shortle to launch satellites is the price. Satellite Business Systems, a joint venture of Aetna Life and Casualty, Commumeaning Satellite Corp. and International Business Machines, is paying $9 million, as against $23 million the company paid to launch each of its first two satellites using expendable Delta rock-

But those rates are bargain introductory offers, and rates will more than double after 1985. At that time, the shuttle will still be less expensive than the National Aeronautics and Space Adminis-tration's Delta rockets, but will face competition from a launching service developed by the European Space Agency, which uses expendable Ariane rockets. Its rates are now between those of the shuttle and the NASA Delta rockets. Both NASA and the Europeans accuse each other of subsidizing their rates, so it is difficult to determine which service is less expensive in the long run.

The shuttle is scheduled to put five communications satellites in orbit this fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30, 1983, eight or nine the next year and 15 the next.

Because launching represents roughly half the cost of getting a satellite into orbit, a savings of $10 million is viewed as significant. Executives say the cheaper launching costs will help lower costs for telephone rate payers or pay televi-sion services, but it is not clear whether the savings will be noticeable to consumers.

The shuttle can put four satellites into orbit on a single mission, or it can be used to carry fewer satellites that are bigger and heavi-

Coleco Taking On Video Game Giants

NEW YORK - Attack and defend: In the fantasy world of video games, that is the theme played out daily on millions of television screens. And much like the characters in those electronic conflicts. Coleco Industries is bent on conquest of the $5-billion home video game

As part of its effort, the company recently introduced its Colecovision home video game system, a cartridge-playing console, to face Atari Inc., the industry leader, and Mattel Inc., the marketer of Intellivision, in the Industry analysts and toy store owners say Colecovision's graphics especially color quality — are generally superior to those of its competi-tors and that in many stores it also enjoys a price advantage. But market-ing battles, especially at Christmas, are oever easy.

"Graphic superiority, that's the basis of our faith in Colecovision," said Amold C. Greenberg, Coleco's president. A second, and perhaps more enduring characteristic, is flexibility, he added.

"We wanted to design a system that could grow, that would not become obsolete, or frozen at one moment of time."

Although Colecovision sales have out yet contributed to Coleco's earnings, other factors have, and Wall Street has taken notice. Coleco's stock has risen about $40 from last December, when it traded at $7. The market has been responding to the company's third quarter earnings of $17.6 million, which is more than eight times the profit reported a year ago. Sales, at $165.6 million, more than tripled last year's third Coleco attributes the gains in earnings and stock price to two develop-First, sales of its video game cartridges, which are playable on Atari and Mattel machines, began in the third quarter. Second, sales of its line of table-top arcade games, which includes the very successful Pac-Man game, continued strong through the quarter. Coleco said it has sold more than 2.2 million table-top machines since the beginning of the year.

Despite these successes, Colecovision's obstacles are formidable. For

OPEC to Move Meeting From Lagos

LAGOS — Nigeria canceled plans Friday to host this year's anoual OPEC summit. But the countries of the try denied that it has made the decisioo to prevent its capital from becoming the venue for a show-down with Saudi Arabia over price

In a statement, Yahaya Dikko, oil adviser to President Shebu Shagari and current president of OPEC, said Nigeria did not regard the location of the meeting "as a national priority or as a matter of great importance."

"When it became apparent that some member states felt that an alternative venue would be more appropriate, we took the view that edge over its own. The Nigerians,

GATT Says Slump In Trade Persists As Curbs Multiply

By Tom Heneghan

Remens

GENEVA — The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade issued a gloomy review of shrinking international trade Friday, less ing international trade Friday, less than two weeks before a meeting of the organization aimed at discouraging trade barriers.

GATT said world trade, showing parallels to the depression of the 1930s, has not yet revived from a 1-percent drop in value recorded last year.

last year.

Protectionism is growing as governments try to shield their industries from foreign competition, and the boom in bank lending in recent years has left many countries deep in debt and unable to afford more imports, the trade body said.

At the same time, prices if commoditles exported by Third World countries fell an average of 13 percent last year, while those for developed countries fell 4.5 percent. This situation further reduced the This situation further reduced the poorer countries' ability to finance imports.

The 194-page report said 1981 was "another disappointing year for the world ecooomy. No improvement in these trends has become evident so far in 1982."

In a section designed as a guide for the 88 trade ministers from GATT member countries, due to meet in Geneva Nov. 24-27 for the first time since 1973, the report warned that protectionism could cause a severe disturbance in the world imancial system.

"It is often argued that a short-age of international liquidity leads to protectionism," the report said. "The danger inherent in the present situanoo is just the reverse that protectionism could cause an international liquidity shortage." The report estimated debts of the oil-importing Third World at more than $500 billion and put Eastern Europe's debts at $80 billion to $90 billion. A good part of the borrowing, the report said, is "deadweight debt," used to pay for imports with the percentage of the pay for imports with the percentage of the pay for imports with the percentage of the percentage o imports rather than productive investment. The report likened the situation to the buge global indebt-edness of the 1920s caused by German war reparations and debts.

This trend could combine with the gradual closing of import mar-kers to produce a collapse in prices such as that of the 1930s, accord-ing to GATT, which was founded in 1948 in an attempt to foster free

Io a review of 1981 trade, which totaled just under $2 trillion. GATT said trade in manufactured goods grew 4.5 percent from its 1980 level.

U.S. 'Will Be Hurt Least'

The United States warned other oations Friday that they will suffer if they reject measures to reduce protectionism at the GATT talks, United Press International repon-ed from Geneva.

Michael B. Smith, the U.S. representative to GATT, said: "It would be a tragedy if the ministerial session were long on rhetoric and short on performance."

If protectionism is not checked

If protectionism is not checked, he said, world trade "will wither and we will all suffer from higher prices, less choice in goods and progressive stagnation in our econ-omies," he said.

"If ministers are unable to decide at least on measures to reduce protectionism, all countries will suffer, including the United States," he added. "But because of the size of our domestic economy, the U.S. will be hurt last and

Japan Protests French Move

Japan formally protested Friday against France's import restrictions on videotape recorders, the Associated Press reported from Tokyo.

Since Oct. 21, France has consigned customs clearance for the products to a small bureau in Poi-tiers, 215 miles (350 kilometers) southwest of Paris. Because the procedure slows imports, Japan's ales of the recorders in France have fallen to one-tenth of the level before the restriction took effect, Japanese officials said.

Japan exported 440,000 of the recorders to the first nine months of 1982, compared with 250,000 in

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Swiss Watchmaker Reports Loss

BIENNE, Switzerland (Combined Dispatches) --- Switzerland's leading watch manufacturer Friday reported a loss of 150 million Swiss francs ($67.5 million) for 1981, said it expects a similar loss this year and said it would probably need a rescue operation by Swiss banks.

The Allgemeine Schweizerische Uhrenindustrie (Assag), whose product lines include Rado, Longines and Certina, faces a "very worrying" financial situation, board president Peter Renggli said at a oews conference before the publication of the comment's annual proof.

ence before the publication of the company's annual report.

Board member Walter Frehner, who is also a general manager at Swiss Bank Corp., said that a bank rescue operation could hardly be avoided. If the forecast for 1982 is accurate, losses since 1980 will total 340 million Swiss francs, other officials said.

French Set Machine Tool Venture

PARIS (Reuters) - Cie. Financière de Suez and Cie. Générale d'Electricité, both state-owned companies, plan to form a machine tool holding company to be named Cie. Générale de Machines-Outils, the Ministry of Industry and Research said Friday.

The new company's capital, the amount of which was not given, will be 51-percent held by Suez and 49-percent held by CGE's subsidiary Industry sources said the oew company plans to invest more than 1 billion francs ($135 million) through 1985. Of this, 375 million francs will come out of the company's basic capital, 400 million francs from state grants and the rest from bank credits, they said.

Pillsbury to Take $8 Million Charge

MINNEAPOLIS (Renters) — Pillsbury said Friday it plans to take an $8 million charge against fiscal second-quarter earnings in connection with the writeoff of certain Burger King restaurant assets.

A company spokesman said the writeoff includes closing of restaurants, but he declined to provide specifics. The quarter ends Nov. 30. The company said that before the writeoff, second quarter earnings will be below less used to $2.08 a share. be below last year's $2.08 B share.

German Chemical Firms Gloomy

FRANKFURT (Reuters) - The West German chemical industry has been hit by an export slump since July and this year's sales are not expected to show any growth, Herbert Grüoewald, president of the industry association VCL said Friday.

Mr. Grünewald, management board chairman of Bayer, said that sales in the first six months were 3 percent higher than in the same period of 1981, but by the end of October the growth rate had shrunk to 1 percent.

U.S. Compromises On IMF Funding

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The United States has told four of its allies that it favors increasing the re-sources of the International Monetary Fund by 40 percent to aid countries that cannot make ends meet, monetary sources say.

The new American plan represents a substantial narrowing of positions between the United States and other countries. Earlier this year Washington had resisted any increase, while other countries were urging a minimum of 50 per-

Reagan administration representatives also said they oow want a shorter timetable for getting the new resources into place at the fund, which is the principal agency for such aid.

The American position became known as an increasing oumber of countries, the latest being Mexico. Argentina and South Africa, are calling on the 146-nation agency for loans. The IMF was set up in 1944 to aid countries hurt by balance of payments deficits.

The shrinkage in the fund's re-sources as debt problems for many countries grow more acute has raised fears of a global banking crisis that could deepen the world

American and European mone-tary sources said that Beryl Sprinkundersecretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs, offered the plan to increase the $67 billion in IMF quotas at a secret meeting bere Wednesday of deputies of the so-called Group of Five. The deputies --- representing the United States, Britain, France, West Germany and Japan - met to coordinate their approach oo world economic issues.

European officials said the narrowing of differences on fund quotas could lead to broader international agreement early in the oew

"My feeling is that oow everyone wants to accelerate the negotiating process and will be prepared to compromise," said a ranking German official. But a French offi cial, while noting that the Ameri-can move had improved the oego-tiating climate, said a 50-percent increase in the quotas was still an "absolute minimum" for his gov-

Mr. Sprinkel declined to comment. A Treasury spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said a policy decision had been made oot to com-ment on the IMF discussions.

To John Williamson, a former adviser to the fund and now a sen-ior fellow at the Institute of International Economics, an early agreement on what is now likely to agreement on what is now likely to be a 40- to 50-percent increase "would certainly be belpful and might be enough to defuse the im-mediate banking crisis." But he said it probably would still be in-sufficient to fill the gap between the borrowing needs of the Third World countries and what com-mercial banks would be able or mercial banks would be able or willing to supply.

one, the player's production run is limited. The company said 500,000, at most, will be produced by the end of the year, compared with oearly 4.5 million Atari units and about 2 million Intellivision units. Some toy store owners are already concerned about pre-Christmas shortages.

Second, Colecovision does oot play Atari game cartridges, which account for nearly 80 percent of all cartridges sold. An adapter to correct that shortcoming will be available this month for about $50, Mr. Greenberg said. But with that additional $50, Colecovision's price advantage disappears. Moreover, Mattel has fought back by offering a $50 rebate on its own systems sold before Nov. 28, At most toy stores, Colecovisioo costs between $170 and $190, compared with Intellivision's $230 to $250, less the $50 rebate. Although Atari's suggested retail price is $199.99 for the 2600 model, and $269 for the oewly introduced 5200, many stores, especially sioce Colecovision's debut, are discounting the Atari systems.

duced this fall, Atari had a 1977 model product to the market and Mattel had a 1980 product," said Richard Simon, an analyst with Goldman Sachs. "Atari has since introduced its new model, and Mattel's rebate has made it price competitive. Things are going to get much tougher I think it will be increasingly difficult for Coleco."

Toy store owners and managers ooted, however, that Mattel's new game system is not expected to be widely available before Christmas, and that Atari's new 5200 game system, which features an enlarged memory and a greater selection of games, is not compatible with its old 2600 game system.

Potential Colecovisioo buyers have also apparently been attracted by Coleco's licensing agreement with Nintendo Inc., the Japanese creator of Donkey Kong, a current Reviewed by Phyllis Theroux WANTED: "Live-in person to wheelchair bound with muscular dystrophy. Must be loving and cheerful. Must piss child and turn him during the night. Must, after school when he tires of entertaining himself by drawing or listening to records, be willing to tell him stories, sing old camp songs, dance around the living room like a klutzy Makarova to Chopm polonaises . . . And if all fails, as sometimes happens, and you sense that the shadow has fallen across his soul, must hold him in your arms and tell him that you love him, and lift his arms and fold them around your neck so that he can tell you that he loves you too. Best salary for right person." The "right" person never came along. Until her son Peter died at 15, it was his mother who circled him like a guard dog, chucked his chin, called him dopey names and --- as his life began to flicker dangerously --- began to catch his words, like wax crippings, in a journal that became the starter wick for a book. And what a book!

"Intensive Care" is tough, funny, heart-breaking and astute --- an astonishing achievement for any writer, let alone Mary-Lou Weisman, on her first time out of the gate.
It could be argued that one has to be a very bad writer to misuse the material that Weisman was handed ---the saga of a bright, upwardly mobile young Jewish couple from Connecti-cut suddenly confronted with a dying son. But one has to be a superb writer to lift the story above the wheelchair that Peter was confined to from his 10th year on and waltz around with it so brilliantly And that is what Weis-man, who vowed that "Peter's life must grow steadily and bravely up-ward, against a declining graph life of utter failure," has done.

The book never loses sight of its natural focus — the innocent, gutsy kid who wrote "Would You Have Let Franklin Delaware Roosevelt Sit Where He Wanted In This Cafeteria?" on a sign when he was made to move his wheelchair in the lunch room, who sighed "I'm not the man I used to be" when he could no longer put his own arms around his mother's neck. But in the Weisman family's struggle to channel their grief, con-duct their lives and perhaps even prolong the length of Peter's ("I'll make you a deal, God. Let me have him as long as I can lift him. Okay?" pleads Weisman), they go oo the road in search of emotional and medical help. It is here that the story, instead of narrowing, expands.

For four months, the family lives at the human potential center, the Esalen Institute in Big Sur, Calif, where the mountains "like heavy folds of Renaissance skirts, slide toward the sea." It was a beautiful setting but not a beautiful experience, and I am sure that Esalen rues the day Mary-Lou Weisman, whose eyes tend to get sharper when full of tears, ever set foot inside.

"You aren't back East anymore," says a beauteous, bra-less creature called Felicity Phum, "where people are such uptight a——that they don't care about anyone else but themselves. Esalen is a real community... We're available to one another. If Peter should fall and you're not there, someone will pick him up. "'Just like that?' I ask. I feel my dry, withered spirit dare to dampen and dilate. "'Just like that.' Felicity touches my arm gently with her hand.

That would be nice, I say, feeling tears form in my eyes." But for the Weismans, particularly Mary-Lou, Esalen doesn't work.

"I feel sad that Mary-Lou is unwilling to trust us with her true feelings. How do you feel about this? Felicity calls on Larry [Weisman's hus-

"'I take responsibility for hurting Mary-Lou, be mumbles, as if there were a gun to his head.

"Why don't you tell her remember to make eye contact." Felicity

"Reluctantly Larry turns toward me. He looks very tired and very uncomfortable. "I can take responsibility for hurting you, Mary-Lou. I can't say that I to, or I wouldn't have done it. Right now, I'm not in touch with the part of me that wants to hurt you. I'm only aware of the part that's sorry.' Beautiful, Larry. That was really beautiful,' says beautiful Felicity." Finally, the Weismans check ont of Esalen, after discovering Peter and their older son Adam trying to exorcise their anger, Esalen-style, by shouting the "f word" as they punch a pillow, perilously near the edge of a cliff. "It doesn't work, Adam," sobs Peter, flinging himself onto the pillow. I still hate it here."

" 'C'mon, guys.' Larry lifts Peter up in his arms. Where are we going? Peter sniffs. "We're getting the hell out of here."

"I never fit in ' said Mary-Lou, explaining the experience to a friend later. It was like being in the Garden of Eden." That sounds rather nice .

"Except that I was the snake."

The scope of "Intensive Care" somewhat dares a reviewer to do it justice, because it is too elegant and earthy to reflect in a snippet, which is what a review, no matter how positive, is. But while managing to stick to her main purpose, which is to tell the reader a story that wants telling. Weisman lifts Peter like a candle to illuminate so much internal and exter-pal territory that "Intensive Care" exceeds without transgressing the bounds of the book. And in the end, Weisman gives you Peter, lowering him gently but directly onto your lap.

"You're really very fortunate to have a kid like me,' said Peter. You could have had a real spoiled brai." "That's true,' I say, kissing the tip of his nose, 'I count my hlessings that I have a child as wonderful as you.' " 'I wouldn't count my blessings if I were you, said Peter.
"You wouldn'1? Why not."

"Because it sounds too pathetic."

There is nothing pathetic about "Intensive Care," although there are times when the power of Weisman's prose squeezes the heart like a sponge. But perhaps the best moments leave you laughing. It takes a bit of courage to pick the book up. But it takes too much discripting to put it down much discipline to put it down.

Donlan Says Key to NFL Pact Is Realism, Not Compromise

NEW YORK — Jack Donlan, chief negotiator for the National Football League Management Council, has declared that talks with striking NFL players will not resume unless the union takes a position much closer to the own-conceptual differences and it's time they realized that they have to cally in our direction." Donlar said Thursday in response to a four-page memorandum from the union. The union letter called for renewed negotiations "in the spirit of compromise" to end the 53-daynid players strike.

But Doulan replied: "Our money proposal is out there. Comproise is not the watchword at this time. Realism is

Doulan said that Ed Garvey, ex-ecutive director of the NFL Play-ers Association, had provided "no basis for a settlement or the resumption of meaningful negotia-tions, and he described the outlook for going back to the bargain-ing table as without hope, "based on their position as stated in the Garvey said: This weekend is critical if the season is to resume, but management refuses to bargain. It is incumbent on them to get on with it. The only hope to salvage the season is to reach a col-Carvey said that 17 player representatives at a meeting in the Summit. Hotel. Thursday night were upset about teams "bargain..."

ing privately with their players." "You can't have 28 separate ne-gonations going with club personnel who do not know the issues," Garvey said. He called "ridicaloss the situation in Dallas, where the club president, Tex Schramm, was talking with quarterback Danny White. "There's something like nine issues and they've resolved eight of them." Garvey added. "What if they resolve all of them? Who does it bind, Danny and Tex? Does it ations an invitation to anarchy. Meanwhile, published reports in Miami that Dolphin players had reversed an earlier position and joined five other teams in accept-ing the owners latest offer in principle, were denied by Ed Newman, Dolphins have rejected the management offer because of glaring omissions," he said.

Although Garvey says the union is still solid, the Cincinnati Bengals, Denver Broncos, Houston Oilers, Los Angeles Rams and New Orleans Saints have now voted conditional approval of the owners' package.

"No team, and, as far as we know, no individual member has endorsed your proposal as it stands," Garvey said in the memo-randum to Donlan, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle and Chuck Sullivan of the New England Patriots, chairman of the management council's executive committee. "In total, approximately 100-125 out of 1,600 players have accepted in principle your last proposal. It's quite possible the same number would have accepted your Sept. 8

An Associated Press survey Thursday showed at least 197 votes to accept the management proposal in principle. Dallas and San Francisco reject-ed the proposal, but the Cowboys said it would be acceptable with changes and the 49ers said it should be used as a framework to resume negotiations

Mickey Marvin of the Los Angeles Raiders said his team did not vote but would have had no more

The Buffalo Bills and Kansas City Chiefs have yet to take a stand, but were expected to meet In denying the dissident teams' action represented an erosion of support, Garvey said they had "a list of items they would have to have in order to go along with it. In fact, if the owners grant all those things these teams ask for, we'd probably have a collective bargaining agreement."

"Let's take a team like New Or-leans, who said it would accept in principle the owners' plan," Garvey said. "The Saints won't accept it as written. That means manage-ment has to negotiate some of the terms of the agreement. But they won't negotiate.

Garvey said the players were asking $366 million a year for three years, while the owners were at $320 million for five years.

Donlan said the owners' proposal as of Saturday night, when nego-tiations collapsed, would cost $270 million for 1983 alone. The union did not respond by reducing the cost of its demands but, in fact, the last proposals made increased costs substantially." Donlan said.

In a related development, Don-lan was quoted by the Dallas Morning News as saying there is no way striking players would get paid for the entire season if play resumed. That was one of the Cowboys' conditions for accepting the management offer.

"We will not move the Super Bowl, and there is no chance a 16-game schedule will be played." Donlan said. They will not be paid

Orioles Name Altobelli as Manager

BALTIMORE - The Baltimore East. Orinles ended months of speculation Friday by selecting Joe Alto-Francisco Giants, to succeed Earl Weaver, who retired as manager:

Hank Peters, the Oriole general manager, did not disclose the terms of Altobelli's two-year contract. Altobelli, who managed in the Baltimore minor-league system for live seasons, becomes the seventh manager in the 30-year history of Baltimore and succeeds one

Altobelli said he was not going to tamper with the success of the Onoles, who have posted the best record in baseball over the past 26 years, and last season finished one game behind the Milwaukee

At a news conference, Altobelli said: "Usually a new manager says. 'We'll be turning things around here.' But that's all out the window, because of the job done

"I just want to keep the show going, and win one more ball game than any other team in the American League. I don't feel that I'm new here. This is the ball club and the organization that got me start-ed. It took me longer than I of baseball's most successful man- thought it would take, but f finally got bere."

The Orioles had known for a year that Weaver would step aside after the 1982 season, yet they needed another six weeks before naming his successor.

Speculation at one time centered on John McNamara, who has managed three major league teams. But Peters and Edward Bennett Williams, the team owner, let it be known that they wanted

During the last two years Alto-belli has worked as a third-base coach for the New York Yankees. In 1980, he managed the Yankees' Triple-A farm team at Columbus to the International League championship.

Altobelli, 50, was chosen over Cal Ripken Sr., the Oriole third-base coach, and Ray Miller, the pitching coach. Ripken had been Weaver's choice: Miller was a longshot. Peters said of the choice of Altobelli: "Joe is a very solid Orioleoriented baseball man, and we're pleased and proud to have him as our manager. Peters said that all five Orioles coaches under Weaver, including Ripken and Miller, have been invited back for the next season. Like Weaver, Altobelli never made it big in the major leagues, hitting only 210 in four seasons with the Minnesota Twins and Cleveland Indians.

Also like Weaver, Altobelli was ger, posting a 960-793 record in 14 seasons for a .584 winning percentage. He has a career mark as a maor-league manager of 225-239.

Weaver retired after 14½ years as the Oriole manager with a 596 winning percentage, the third best in history. He guided the Orioles to six Eastern Division championships, four American League pen-nants and the 1970 World Series

Weaver will remain as a scout for the Orioles for two years.

Embarrassment in College Football: The Best Teams Are on Probation By Gordon S. White Jr. season. Arizona State's current

TOUCHDOWN - Vernon Williams (38) leapt into the end zone over Dennis Fowlkes (50) to score Rutgers' first touchdown Thursday night at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey. But Jeff Hostetler threw touchdown passes of 54 and 43 yards to Rich Hollins in the second half, and Willie Drewrey returned a punt 75 yards to score as West Virginia won, 44-17.

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Arizona State, Georgia and Southern Methodist, the only remaining undefeated and untied major college football teams this season, are a source of some embarrassment to the college athletie community because each is serving a period of probation for violations of National Collegiate Athletie Association rules.

Although each of these teams is eligible for postsesson play this winter and will undoubtedly appear in a bowl game, some college officials believe that highly suc-cessful teams under penalty only add to a poor public image of intercollegiate athletics.

A study of the Georgia and SMU rosters and statements from NCAA investigators indicate that neither school has an athlete on its team who was involved in the rules violations. Arizona State has only one player remaining on its football team who was involved in that school's problem.

Nevertheless, Charles Alan Wright, the chairman of the NCAA committee on infractions that banded down the penalties to these schools, said, "This is a very damning case, isn't it?" Vince Dooley, coach of Georgia.

who served for the last 10 years as chairman of the ethics committee of the American Football Coaches Association, said, "It's a black eye, but we just have to stand up and address it. I think it is coincidental that these schools are in some form of probation and undefeated. It is, bowever, bad timing as far as collese football is concerned and as it reflects on college fontball."

Olav B. Kollevoll, the chairman of the NCAA eligibility committee and a member of the NCAA Council agreed. "At first blush," he said, referring to violations of the NCAA rules, "it sure looks like you have to do it to be there,

Southern Mississippi's fontball program was put on a two-year probation by the NCAA last Mon-day. The probation carries sanc-tions against bowl appearances this season and next and sanctions against appearances on television in the 1983 and 1984 seasons. Georgia is permitted to play in a bowl and to be in televised games during its probation year. Howev-er, the NCAA cut the number of football scholarships Georgia can give in 1983 freshmen from 30 to SMU was put on a two-year probation that ends next June because of 10 violations that included promises of illegal payments to athletes. This penalty carried sanc-tions against bowl and television appearances for the 1981 season only and resulted from infractions committed in 1978 and 1979, before Collins became the Mustangs' head coach. SMU has been on NCAA probation three times in the last seven years.

In the latest case against South-ern Methodist, NCAA enforce-ment sources said, the sanctions regarding television and bowl games were limited to one year based on what the NCAA perceived to be the "severity" of the violations. The extra year of probation, the sources added, is in monitoring purposes.

In December 1980, Arizona
State was put on NCAA probation for a two-year period that ends next month. This resulted from 20 violations, including academic irregularities, illegal payments to inducements from 1975 to 1979.

The NCAA barred the Sun Devils from television in the 1981 and 1982 regular seasons and from bowl games after the 1981 season only. The Pacific-10 Conference only. The Pacific-10 Conference had barred Arizona State from a bowl appearance after the 1980

Van Patten Saves a Match at Wembley

WEMBLEY, England (AP) - Vince van Patten saved two match points Friday and beat Wojtek Fibak of Poland, 4-6, 7-6, 6-4, 10 advance into the semifinals of the grand prix tennis tournament at Wembley

Van Patten qualified to play Brian Gottfried, the No. 6 seed who used a strong serve to defeat Andres Gomez of Ecuador, the No.4 seed, 7-6, 6-2. John McEnroe, the top seed who defeated Mark Dickson in the second round, was scheduled to play Henri Leconte, the promising 19-yearold Frenchman, in the quarterfinals.

Fibak had two match points against Van Patten when he led, 6-4, in the tie-breaker of the second set. The American then produced two winning vulleys, a furehand and a backhand, tying the score 6-6. Van Patten then served an ace to lead, 7-6, and won a lucky point with a forehand that skipped on the net to capture the set.

Turnbull Tops Austin, but Team Loses

ADELAIDE, Australia (AP) - Wendy Turnbull, a 30-year-old Australian, beat Tracy Austin on Friday, 6-4, 2-6, 7-5, in the tennis tournament pitting a Commonwealth team against the Rest of the World.

But Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia then beat Sue Barker of Britain to wrap up the tournament for ber team. Mandlikova and two Americans, Austin and Pam Shriver, are playing for the Rest of the World, while Barker, Turnbull and Evonne Goolagong Cawley, another Australian, are representing the Commonweath.

Turnbuil's victory made the score in the four-day tournament 4-1 for the Rest of the World, and Mandlikova then made it an unbeatable 5-1 with a 6-3, 6-4 victory over Barker with just three matches remaining.

Top Mixed Doubles Team Eliminated

HOUSTON (UPI) - JoAnne Russell and Sherwood Stewart teamed Thursday to defeat the top-seeded team of Anne Smith and Kevin Curren in the first World Mixed Doubles Tennis Championships. Top prize in the tournament, which sponsors hope to make an annual event, is

Russell and Stewart won a tie-breaker in the first set and then went on to a 7-6, 6-3 sweep of the U.S. Open and Wimbledon champinns.

Billie Jean King and Gene Mayer, seeded fourth, defeated Andrea Leand and Paul McNamee, 6-3, 7-6; Martina Navratilova and Peter McNamara, seeded second, defeated Leslie Allen and Fred Stolle, 5-7, 7-6. 6-1, and Mary Lou Piatek and Fritz Buehning beat Chris Evert Llnyd and John Lloyd, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2.

McCrory, Curry to Fight for Crown

MIAMI (AP) — Alberto Mendoza of Venezuela, president of the World Boxing Association, has announced that Milton McCrory of Detroit and Don Curry of Fort Worth, Texas, ranked Nos. 1 and 2, respectively, would light for the vacant welterweight title. The site and date of the bout have nut been set.

The title was left vacant with the retirement of Sugar Ray Leonard on Leonard also was recognized by the World Boxing Coucil, which also ranks McCrory and Curry first and second, respectively. It was unclear what action the WBC would take concerning the vacant title.

NHL Goal Output Down From 1981-82

MONTREAL (UPI) - National Hockey League teams are scoring at a slightly slower pace this season, averaging 7.9 goals per game after last season's dramatic rise to 8.03 goals per game, according to a statistics report released by the league Thursday,

The 1981-1982 goal-scoring spree was the highest average since 19431944. The single-season goals per game record was 1917-1918, when NHL clubs scored an average of 10.1 goals per game.
The Quebec Nordiques led the league with an average of 5.0 goals in their first 14 games, followed by Montreal with 4.9 goals. Winnipeg and Edmonton tied for third with 4.8.

Lafleur Sidelined With Broken Toe

MONTREAL (UPI) - Guy Lafleur, star right wing of the Montreal Canadiens, has been told by team doctors to stay off his right fonl until further tests are taken on his broken toe, a club spokesman said Friday. The spokesman said Lafleur, who broke the bule toe on his right foot in a collision this week with Steve Payne of the Minnesota North Stars. will be re-examined Monday to determine if he can resume National Hockey League play.

Dodgers Sign Lasorda for 7th Season

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers signed Tommy Lasorda on Thursday to manage the National League baseball team for the 1983 season. It will be his seventh year as the Dodger manager.

The Dodger vice president, Al Campanis, announced Lasorda's oneyear contract and the signing of coaches Monty Basgall, Mark Cresse, Ron Perranoski and Manny Mnta. Joe Amaliitano, named the Dodgers' third-base coach Oct. 20, also signed.

Lasorda, 55, has led the Dodgers to three National League pennants and a World Championship in 1981. The Dodgers finished second in the Western Division this season, but were not out of the title chase until the final game, in which they were beaten by the Atlanta Braves.

In Praise of Tati His Densely Packed Film Comedies Were Rooted in the Believable and the Probable

By Vincent Canby New York Tulies Service

NEW YORK — The news of the death in Paris Nov. 5 of Jacques Tati was especially saddening and, although he was 75. a shock. Tati, like the films he made and starred in, seemed to exist outside particular time. Like Hulot, the civilizing focal point of those films. Tati was less a comic personality than an ageless, humane poiot of view. Tati was a method, a way of looking at the world to discover comic rhythms oever seen before or since in movies.

Though he made only five ilms — "Jour de lête" (1948). "Monsieur Hulot's Holiday" (1953), "Mon Oncle" (1958). "Playtime" (1967) and "Traffic" (1971), plus a few shorts and one delightful variety show. "Parade" (1974), for Swedish television -Tati was an authentic master of the cinema.

In the furious, sloppy, fad-oriented milieu of commercial films. Tati was a blithe if sometimes: stuhborn perfectionist. a loner wbo, for at least a little while, outwitted the system that turns lesser artists into hacks. He never became a hack, but be was unable to work for the last 10 years of his life because of financial probtems that were, for him, far more devastating than those of Francis Ford Coppola after the hust of "One From the Heart."

Tati managed tn survive, his art and his integrity intact, for far looger than nne might have ini-tially predicted. His method: to keep the budgets as low as possihle by eschewing stars and affilia-tion with big companies that might have pressured him to speed up his output. Instead, he spent what in other filmmakers was an unconscionable amount of money to buy time, first to write aod prepare a film, and then to shoot, reshoot, edit and create his extraordinary soundtracks that combine music, noises of rude and wonderful sorts, and dialogue for pricelessly dizzy ef-

The films that have come out of this process, and which have no familiar personalities except for Tati as Hulot, are comedies as densely packed with visual and aural gags as any films made by anyone, including Keaton and Chaplin. Unlike those masters, Tati seldom dealt with sentiment.

Tati as Monsieur Hulot in "Mon Oncle."

never with the sentimental, and had little use for the kind of fantasy that hnth Keaton and Chaplin regarded as a natural extension of the real world.

His comedy is rooted to the be-lievable, the probable and the logical. It's both hased on observation and presented as something to be observed by the audience, in full-frame, long and medium shots that allow the audience to make up its own mind about what it's seeing.

It took Tati five years each to make "Monsieur Hulot's Hnli-day" and "Mnn Oncle," oine years to make "Playtime," his chef d'oeuvre and the film that finally brought his career to a halt, and four years to make "Traffic," The development of the Tati career is exemplified to the refinement of what can only very loosely be described as the "character of Hulot, Though Hulnt is immediately identifiable as a physical presence, the personality within remains elusive. The tall man, slightly stooped, as if he were always listening to a dwarf, can be recognized a mile away as a somewhat over-age preppie, a pipe stuck into his mouth, wearing pants that are too short, a porkpie hat and the sort of poplin raincoat that never comfortahly fits anyone. But who, really, lo "Jour de fête," where he is listed in the credits simply as "the Postman." not yet having a proper name, he is more conventional than he will ever be again. He's an immensely eager civil servant who attempts to hring to a drowsy small town in the center of France the efficiency methods he has learned from a documentary about the United States Post Office Department. Hulnt is briefly - a man with a mission In succeeding films, though, be becomes increasingly ocbulous, a creature around whom and to sion visit to Paris, Hulot was little more than an occasional figure oo the horizon. The gently foolish, pipe-smoking nut is seen io marked conflict with the sleek modernity of the "new" Paris that, when Tati made the film. hadn't yet come into being. Tati went into debt up to his eyeballs to produce "Playtime" in the manner he saw fit. He shot it io 70mm and mostly on a magnificent outdoor set of glass-andsteel high-rises that cost a thenastronomical $800,000. Possibly because "Playtime" was not profitable. Tati gave Hulot greater principance in "Traffic," which turned out to be his last film. Shortly after he completed it, the banks impounded all his films except "Jour de fête" in lieu of repayment of outstanding loans. In "Traffic" as io the earlier films, the figure of Hulot is there as a sort of yardstick by which we measure our own reactions to the scene. Among the highlights are a ballet of windshield wipers, in which the winers reflect the characters of the drivers and a spectacular, multiple-car smash-up in which everyone behaves with frightfully genteel decency. "Is this your hubcap?" "Oh. yes. Thank you."

Tuti's films may be storyless, but they are anything but formless. They are carried forward by their succession of magnificent sight-and-sound gags that, at best, lead nne into another with seamless comic logic. Though he has great fun at the expense of modern life, his films are not exercises in anti-modernism. They are illuminated more by wonder ment than by anything as simple as outrage.
"In real life," says François

Truffaut, "we get so used to noises that we don't hear them." Tati, Truffaut thinks, thus gets tied up by his own insistence on logic and believability. "By the end of Mon Oncle." Tati creates a mad, nightmarish, overly concentrated universe which paralyzes laughter rather than engender-

Cabbie Sues Rather

Rather faces a $4-million lawsuit for defamation of character and depriving income from a Chicago cab driver who Rather contended took him on a ride to nowhere. The cabbie, Engene Phillips, said he picked up Rather at O'Hare International Airport two years ago Wednesday. Phillips was to take him to the North Side home of the author Studs Terkel, with whom Rather had an interview. But Philline said as the taxi neared Terkel's house, Rather accused him of not taking him where he wanted to go and refused to pay the $12.55 fare. Phillips took off — with Rather in the cab — and drove south Phillips was charged with disorderly conduct but Rather, saying he had a busy schedule, dropped charges against the driver. Phillips, who filed the suit as a pauper to avoid the filing fee, said he was forced to give up the cab he leased from Checker Cab Co. and lost his only source of income. He also said he lost "both time and money from a

The Broadway producer-director Hal Prince was given the Com-monwealth Award in dramatic aris — 514,000 tax-free and a com-memorative statue — at the Sin-bert Theater in New York, Jerush ah Shea, vice president of the Bank of Delaware, which adminis the award, presented it "he order of importance." He handed Prince the check first. Prince told an andience that included Hermione Cla-gold, the producer Alexander Cohen, and Gerald Schoenfeld, the Shubert president, that he felt lucky not to be born 20 years later. Prince, who brought such hits as "West Side Story," "Cabares" and "Evita" to Broadway, sald aswadays high costs have reduced the opportunity for experiment in the musical theater.

The Rolling Stones guitariet Keith Richard, 38, has decided to wed his girlfriend, the American model Patti Hanson, 27, the Sun of London reported. According to the newspaper, the two are planning a wedding in New York within a month, with Mick Jagger, the Stones' lead singer, as best man.

Jay Osmond, one of the singing Osmond brothers, says he and 20-year-old Teresa Lyn Chingsa, Brig-ham Young University's 1982 homecoming queen, will marry in early spring. Osmond, 27, and Chingas, a sophomore at BYU majoring in elementary education who has worked as a professional model, plan to live in Provo, Utah, after the wedding.
